Sherman Sues

Lehrman for Accounting—Alleges Breach of Contract

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Suit for attachment for alleged breach of contract was filed yesterday by Harry A. Sherman against Henry Lehrman and the Henry Lehrman Prod. Inc. Attorney Philip Cohen representing Sherman instructed the sheriff to attach all moneys of Lehrman on deposit with the Union Bank and Trust Co., the Lehrman Studios at Culver City, and the Lehrman residence on Franklin Ave., Hollywood.

Sherman, through his attorney, alleges that on March 13, 1919, Henry Lehrman entered into a written contract with Sherman and among other things employed Sherman as his selling agent for the purpose of selling and exploiting a certain number of photoplays the defendant intended to produce. Sherman's salary, states the agreement, was to have been $250 a week from March 13, to May 10, 1920.

Sherman alleges that he has not received his salary for many weeks, that he has endeavored to get a settlement, but is unable to do so.

According to the agreement Sherman was to dispose of 12 comedies for $40,000 each, and between March 5, and April 25, last, Lehrman modified the terms of the agreement under which Sherman was to sell the comedies, whereby Sherman was authorized to sell the First Natl. Exhibitors Circuit the 12 comedies at $30,000 each, but that notwithstanding this fact Lehrman has not paid him in full for his services. The complaint alleges that the Henry Lehrman Productions, Inc. is commonly known as a one man corporation and that said defendent Henry Lehrman owns probably all the stock.

Goldwyn-Stoll Again

C. E. A. of England Gets Details of Controversy

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

London—The Cinematograph Exhibitors' Asso. of England received a full report of the controversy between Goldwyn and Sir Oswald Stoll, who distributed Goldwyns in England, according to a report in the recent issue of the Kinematograph Weekly.

The report was furnished by Jeffrey Bernard, attorney for the Stoll interests, who was recently in the United States. He told of several conversations he had with Mr. Goldwyn regarding the renewal of the Stoll contract and how no settlement was reached owing to a certain interpretation placed on a clause by Goldwyn and the insertion of an additional clause which the Stoll interests believed unfair.

The reported producing venture of Goldwyn in England is also reported in Kinematograph but the general tone of the report might indicate that the C. E. A. looks upon the venture in an unfriendly attitude.

Stoll's own producing plans are highly commended.

Franchise Sold

Jones, Linick & Schaefer Get $250,000 from Balaban & Katz for First National Franchise

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Chicago—Jones, Linick & Schaefer have disposed of their interest in the First National Exchange of Chicago, for a reputed sum of $250,000 to Balaban & Katz, according to Ralph Kettering, general representative for the former firm.

In speaking for Mr. Jones and his partners, Mr. Kettering said: Seven years ago Jones, Linick & Schaefer organized the Central Film Co. to exploit independent productions. This was at a time when the program-picture was at its prime. About three years ago, Jones, Linick & Schaefer sold one-half interest in the company to Ascher Brothers. When the First National Exhibitors Circuit was formed, Aaron J. Jones and Nathan Ascher were the first to favor it. They secured the franchise for Illinois for their Central Film Co. and shortly afterward changed the name of it to the First National Exchange.

"By the new arrangement Ascher retains his one-half interest and Balaban & Katz have purchased the one-half owned by Jones, Linick & Schaefer. Incidently, Aaron J. Jones has resigned as a director of the First National Exhibitors Circuit to take effect at once."

This is one of the largest film deals ever executed in Chicago and it is the means of joining the vast Ascher Bros. circuit of theaters, with those directed by Balaban & Katz, thus cementing two of Chicago's largest exhibiting firms.

8 Per Cent Accurate

Relative to which, says J. D. after putting the chip in position:

"And that eight per cent. of accuracy in New York born opinions that are supposed to be statements applying to the entire United States is no less because New York City, as a film territory, represents about eight per cent. of the gross revenue on the average release.

"Moreover, no picture executive has either the right or the ability to assume the responsibility for directing the national destinies of a film concern unless he considers it a very important part of his success to visit the various territories at least once a year, and acts accordingly. A theater tour at least once every six months by film executives would be nearer to a practical discharge of executive duties.

"Film conditions, according to the Broadway ideas, may be accepted, as an average, as being eight per cent. correct. Before Mr. Schwalbe, Mr. Gordon and I left New York we had heard countless opinions about what exhibitors were doing, what they intended to do, what trend the business would take in the year to come, what the big development the next twelvemonth would be, and, of equal volume in discussion, but of great inaccuracy and greater importance, the actual conditions now existant in all territories, and which have a very material bearing on the immediate future.

"The actual fact is that the exhibitors out in the territories read very little, and care less, about the changes in the administrative personnels of the various film concerns, about the rumors that the president or general director of this company or that has resigned, or is about to resign, that a certain production was given a private showing atop the Grand Central train sheds to a selected audience copied from the Congressional Blue Book, that a director favorite in the Clarastor grill has taken a company to Jersey City or any other Southern point for exteriors, or that a film executive just imported from some other industry announces his candidacy for exhibitor favor with an expose of his views of the motion picture business.

"In personal talks with many keen, capable exhibitors there was not an instance when one of them requested any verification or denial of the choicest bits of gossip current in New York film circles. They did not appear at all interested in the personalities of the executive side of the producing and distributing branches. But they did ask innumerable questions about matters that are directly pertinent to their own immediate affairs.

"Everywhere there was voiced a genuine interest in the new Capitol Theater here. They wanted to know all about its appointments, what new architectural features it had, how its floor plan had been arranged; the decorations in the lobby and foyers; the type and kind of projection equipment, and the arrangement of the programs which Mr. Bowes creates. The reason for this interest was that the Capitol, as an unprecedented example of theater construction, offered suggestions and ideas for exhibitor use in improving their own properties. And there was a great deal of pride in being able to recommend many of its unique features.

"Exhibitors did not ask for reports on the progress that producing companies were making on trips heralded by much trade paper space, but they did manifest a sincere interest in the exploitation that has been given by the big first run houses to productions already released. They want ideas on showmanship, on advertising, on novel, but practical, publicity stunts that will help them to attract more patronage to their houses. They want to know what other exhibitors are doing to win the elusive 'occasionals' among theater patrons.

"The New York viewpoint on the industry as a whole is at least ninety-two per cent. short of being comprehensive on the majority of subjects its elects to envision. Here we have a purely local condition of affairs, sponsored largely by developments in the New York City exchange and executive offices. This is constantly being stretched to unsupported national proportions, because a certain number of the individuals here operate on national lines. And being in daily touch with the strictly local affairs of Manhattan, they more often than not translate them into terms of nation-wide conditions."

Diamond Buckle for Kirkpatrick

The 26 branch managers, the field manager and the three supervisors of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corp. tendered A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager, a platinum belt buckle studded with 30 diamonds. The tribute was in the form of a Christmas gift.

The front of the buckle is platinum and inlaid is a map of the United States. The back is of gold.

The exchange centers are represented on the platinum map with a large diamond. The four corners are decorated with larger diamonds.

R. C. First 1920 from Brentwood

The first Robertson-Cole production for release during the new year will be "The Third Generation" from the Brentwood studios. It will go out as a "Superior" brand picture.

Fight Over "12:10"

7 last, before Herbert Brenon sailed for England he delivered the scenario of the film at the request of Mr. Brenon who told him he had seen Marie Doro about it and she had read it and agreed to appear in it. Carroll said that before a contract was made protecting his rights in the scenario, Brenon went to England and he has just learned from Mr. Godal that the British & Colonial Films claims to have obtained the right to exhibit the film from Brenon.

Answers filed in the case by Godal and the company he represents allege that the corporation bought the rights to the film from Brenon last March after he had represented that he had bought the rights from Carroll. The defendant produced the picture with Marie Doro in the leading role and on Nov. 19 last, the corporation sold the American rights to Milton C. Work as manager of the Special Picture Syndicate which in turn disposed of them to Republic.

The answer alleges that the Republic is only one member of the syndicate, having contributed $15,000, the others being F. A. Bachman & Co., $15,000, George A. Huhn, Jr., $5,000, and W. L. Neffert, $5,000. The defendants alleged that they acted in good faith and that the plaintiff waited too long to assert his right to the film.

Graham of Famous Players Says France and England Each Need 1,000 Modern Houses

John Cecil Graham, managing director of the three English corporations known as Famous Players Film Co., Ltd., Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd. and the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. is now in New York. He sees an urgent need for 1,000 high grade theaters in England and as many more in France.

"The English people have realized the importance and the possibilities of the motion picture as never before," said Graham.

"There is an urgent need in Great Britain today of at least 1,000 new high grade motion picture houses, as theater building was halted at the beginning of the war.

"The building of new theaters is proceeding at a very satisfactory rate, notwithstanding the difficulty of obtaining materials and the discussions as to housing classifications.

"I believe that the construction of at least 1,000 new theaters will solve to a great extent the problem of advanced booking now under discussion in English film circles.

"The industry in France is making rapid recovery from the effects of the war. France also needs at least 1,000 new high grade theaters and the coming year will undoubtedly witness a great increase in theater building."

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Hartford, Conn.—The Post is launching a contest, for the best essay telling how a girl may earn $10,000 in three months, the same being what Elsie Janis does in "A Regular Girl," which opens at the Strand on Jan. 5. Prizes are as follows: first, $50; second, $25. Girls between the ages of 15 and 21 years are eligible. Walter Griffith worked out the idea.

Milwaukee, Wis.—More than a month before "Stronger Than Death," starring Nazimova was slated to open at the Merrill here, Manager E. C. Bostwick had lights bearing her name in large letters, in the lobby. In the daytime, the white letters against the dark plush background were visible enough, and at night, it was lit up. In addition, a painting of one of the scenes, showing Nazimova feeding a peacock was placed in an advantageous position.

Omaha, Neb.—Black cats rank with number thirteen, and other omens. The management of the Moon offered free admission to the first hundred youngsters who would present black cats, the emblem of the Mabel Normand picture, "Jinx," at the box office, free admission. The stunt was advertised in the local newspapers and on slides in the theater, and helped buldge the receipts.

Blytheville, Ark.—Jimmie Boyd, manager of the Gem, has inaugurated a new system for securing patronage. He has a euphonium mounted on an auto and tours the countryside, serenading the people with tuneful melodies, after which he announces the features which are to be presented at his house that week. The concerts are now expected and as music hath the power to sooth the savage breast, so does it seem to sooth the doubting mind, and the folks visit Boyd's house in turn.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—A similarity contest, was a new exploitation scheme tried by the manager of the Majestic Gardens to put "The Thunderbolt" over. A prize of $25 was offered to the girl who resembled the star most, and there were second and third prizes of $15 and $10 respectively. Carl M. Saunders, photoplay editor of the Herald gave a good deal of publicity to the contest, which incidentally was run by that newspaper, and a great deal of interest was aroused.

Ohio Theater Chain Planned

Columbus, O.—It is reported that James A. Maddox, manager of the Majestic, and I. Frankel of Cincinnati, are about to project a theater chain in Ohio. The report has it that two theaters will be built here, two in Cleveland and one in each of the following cities: Akron, Canton and Lima.

"Griff" Modest as Ever

Talks of Adventure Off Florida Coast—Working On Last of 1st Nat'l Releases

David W. Griffith was as modest as ever yesterday in speaking of his adventure off the Florida coast. The producer arrived in New York on New Year's Day with Richard Barthelmess and Frank Lloyd, his personal representative after hydroplaning from Nassau in the Bahamas to Miami where train connections were made for New York.

Mr. Griffith explained that he did not fear another storm and that his reason for traveling through the air was in order to save time and reach God's country as soon as possible. No one in the party, said Griffith, quite realized the danger of the situation at the time. He wishes to express his thanks through WID'S DAILY for the countless inquiries made as to his welfare and stated that he did not even begin to realize how important he was until the anxious queries of innumerable persons convinced him that his importance must be an actual fact.

While in Florida, Mr. Griffith shot scenes for his remaining two First National productions. After their completion he will at once start work on his first picture for United Artists. This, he thinks will be in the late Spring. The first United Artists release is expected to be "Romance," with Doris Keane.

Incidentally, Mr. Griffith intends remaining in the east for an indefinite period. It is learned that additional land has been secured at Mamaroneck and that increases will be made at the present Griffith studio.

Great, Best This Star Has Turned Out in a Long While

Douglas Fairbanks in
"WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY"
United Artists

DIRECTOR .....Victor Fleming
AUTHORS.....Douglas Fairbanks, Tom Geraghty and Lewis Weadon.
SCENARIO BY.....Fairbanks, Geraghty and Weadon.
CAMERAMEN.....Harry Thorpe and William McCann.
AS A WHOLE.....Best this star has turned out in long while.
STORY.....Good plot holds all the stunts, romance and spectacular stuff together excellently.
DIRECTION.....Generally showed imagination and presented star's stunts to best advantage
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fine
LIGHTING .....Realistic
CAMERA WORK.....Always good; dream sequence when star is shown in slow motion excellent and brings great laugh.
STAR.....Has some real work to his credit in this SUPPORT.....Kathleen Clifford, opposite; Frank Campeau again the villian.
EXTERIORS ..... Varied and good
INTERIORS ..... Suitable
DETAIL.....Star interpolates a lot of particularly good comedy business.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Optimistic as usual;
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,900 feet

Douglas Fairbanks has come through with a blue ribbon winner in "When the Clouds Roll By." It's a picture that shows off the famous stunt comedian to his best advantage and he gives some remarkable demonstrations of his athletic ability, but what must concern many exhibitors even more than this is the matter of the plot. This essential has been sadly lacking in some of Doug's recent releases and the lack has been the just cause of complaint.

The picture opens with Doug eating a heavy dinner at midnight and some great laughs are registered when an "interior" of his stomach is flashed on the screen with figures representing lobster, welsh rarebit, mince pie, etc., performing gymnastics below. Subsequently Doug suffers a nightmare which is shown in the form of a weird chase. The scenes showing Doug fairly floating through the air (ultra-rapid camera stuff) and the flashes of him running around on the ceiling are uproarious.

A lot of comedy is introduced due to Doug's various superstitions and the action goes along merrily on this track for a while until he meets the girl. Here enters some fine rapid-fire romance stuff and quick preparations on Doug's part for a surprise wedding. Here the villainous forces begin work, however, and in a melodramatic sequence Doug discovers that the girl believes him bent on swindling her father and that she has gone west with the idea of marrying the real swindler.

Despair takes hold of him at first but he succeeds in bringing his optimism to the top and, forgetting all about his superstitions, he gives pursuit. The manner in which he catches the train is a fine thrill and then comes the big flood scene which provides a climax of many thrilling sensations and lots of comedy. The story concludes with Doug and the girl married on the roof of a house after a preacher has floated into view on his church steeple.

This is certainly going to get every audience and there's not a disappointment in all its footage. An air of optimism pervades the story, the titles are bright and bring good laughs and the plot provides a real sustaining interest to hold everything together.

You Can Safely Call This One of Doug's Best

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This can safely be called one of Doug's best in your advertising and you won't be stretching the point or splitting hairs for it's so far and away ahead of anything he has done recently that everyone is going to be tickled to death with it.

The title offers a scheme for attractive advertising which has been adhered to in the advertising matter furnished by the distributors. Additional publicity may be derived from the fact that the star also had a big hand in the story and scenario.

However, by terming this one of Doug's best and by a good display of the title you're just naturally going to pack them in. And after the first crowd has gone its way from your theater you'll have to get out the ropes and the old S. R. O. sign for "When the Clouds Roll By" is going to advertise itself by word of mouth. And when a picture does that you can bet your bottom dollar it's there.

Many Elements in This But Horror is the Dominating One

D. W. Griffith's
"THE GREATEST QUESTION"
First National

DIRECTOR ..... D. W. Griffith
AUTHOR ..... William Hale
SCENARIO BY .....D. W. Griffith
CAMERAMAN ..... G. W. Bitzer
AS A WHOLE.....Exceedingly intense picturization of small town life, good romance but too much horror from villain and villainess.
STORY.....Deals to a certain extent with life after death but contains also popular elements of success.
DIRECTION.....Very realistic in every detail, brings out climaxes vividly and maintains wonderful degree of suspense.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS.....Some more of those hazey close-ups from Bitzer; star always prettily lighted.
CAMERA WORK..... Great landscape shots
LEADING PLAYERS.....Lillian Gish and Robert Harron give very realistic performances.
SUPPORT.....The best of Griffith's old stock
EXTERIORS .....Always appropriate and unusual
INTERIORS ..... Plain and realistic
DETAIL.....Griffith inclined to go too extensively into detail of picture's darker side.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Should appeal generally but contains debatable points.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,244 feet

This picture is certainly gripping, intensely gripping, but at the same time it is not exactly pleasant entertainment. It seems too full of horror, of sordid things. There is sunshine in it but the shadows are predominant. For example, the terrible plight of Nellie Jarvis when she is in the power of the Scrubbles, a couple near insanity. A mind at all sensitive is likely to revolt at the long, detailed action showing her at their mercy, showing her struck almost mad by their contemplated tortures of which rape and stabbing out her eyes are not the least. It suggests Poe as a picture producer. But who would want to witness a picturization of Poe's "The Pit and the Pendulum," with the swinging knife ever coming nearer the prone and helpless body of the victim?

Griffith has made the spiritual reappearances of the drowned sailor-boy beautiful, the acting of Eugenie Besserer and George Fawcett helps splendidly to make them so, but it is hard to reconcile such sense of beauty with the climax of horror—and it is horror—not well wrought drama.

The story is laid in a southern village, the kind of place that Griffith can screen in all its peculiar details. The Hilton family has adopted Nellie Jarvis, daughter of a peddler, and in time she sees that she is a burden to them and so hires out to the Scrubbles. Years before when she was but a child she had seen the Scrubbles commit murder and the scene haunts her memory. Scrubble's passions are aroused to the point of insanity by her beauty and his wife's to the point of an insane jealousy by her guileless innocence. Finally she recognizes them as the murderers. She tells them so. They attack her and are preparing to murder her in cold blood when Jimmie Hilton arrives.

Counter to this plot there is the theme of the spirit of John Hilton, swept off a submarine deck and drowned, who returns to guide his parents to happiness and, it might appear, wealth. There is a comedy strain introduced by means of Uncle Zeke, an ancient negro, well played by Tom Wilson, but it amounts to little in the final summing up.

Lillian Gish plays realistically as Nellie. Her fear of the Scrubbles is expressed in a pitiable frenzy. Robert Harron is good as Jimmie and George Nichols and Josephine Crowell as the Stubbles are wierdly horrible. Ralph Graves is John Hilton.

Play Up "Life-After Death" Theme; It Should Draw

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Life after death has been discussed largely in the papers recently. It is this angle of "The Greatest Question" that should be emphasized in the advertising. It will attract many even though they come to scoff. This theme is a good one on which to base discussion by way of newspaper letters if you are running the picture for any length of time.

Of course the name of Griffith and the principal players should be featured. They are popular. The horror of the picture, however, is a point that makes its exhibition before family audiences debatable. It seems to have little place in a picture that deals with things of the spirit as "The Greatest Question" pretends to do and it will not be at all pleasing to many picture goers. However, many may be willing to make allowances because of Griffith's name and the touching on the spiritual theme.

TOPICS of the DAY

Selected from the Press of the World by

The Literary Digest

When "Topics of the Day" was first conceived it was realized that it was more or less of an experiment, since the idea was absolutely new. Today "The Topics of the Day" is no experiment. It is a huge and amazing success. Exhibitors, vaudeville theatres, the press and the public unite in calling it so! Read the following, selected at random:

AN EXHIBITOR SAYS: "Any manager of a picture theatre who does not include it in his program, is NOT a showman. It grows on an audience and contains more genuine entertainment than the majority of comedies." John C. Green, Mgr, Regent Theatres, Galt and Guelph, Ont.

A NEWSPAPER EDITOR SAYS: " 'Topics of the Day' proves . . . that the force with which a subject is carried across the screen is much more powerful than any printed story could be. The outspoken way in which the audience rose to 'Topics of the Day' would have been balm of Gilead to the penners of those paragraphs could they have been there." Baltimore Sun.

A FAN MAGAZINE EDITOR SAYS: " 'Topics of the Day,' according to my observation, is usually greeted with a ripple of joyousness." Jessie Burness, Editor of Film Fun.

A CHAMBER OF COMMERCE SAYS: "As a screen attraction 'Topics of the Day' have Bill Hart, Doug Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and Charles Chaplin beaten to a fadeaway." The Tulsa Spirit, The Official Organ of the Tulsa, Okla. Chamber of Commerce.

NO WONDER THAT " 'T' is A Mark of Distinction To Be An Exhibitor Of Topics Of The Day!"

A Typical Ray Picture That Should Give Great Satisfaction

Charles Ray in
"RED HOT DOLLARS"
Paramount—Artcraft

DIRECTOR .....Jerome Storm
AUTHOR .....Julien Josephson
SCENARIO BY.....Julien Josephson
CAMERAMAN .....Chester Lyons
AS A WHOLE.....Typical Ray stuff from first to last; should please all audiences.
STORY.....Filled with down-to-the-ground comedy and sentiment; holds nicely throughout.
DIRECTION.....Registers all high lights and incidents of story with skill.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Lyons again proves he's a big-league comeraman.
LIGHTINGS.....Very good; some excellent rural shots.
CAMERAWORK .....Highly satisfactory
STAR.....His usual self; pleases constantly
SUPPORT.....Gladys George Ray's new lead; capable members of Ince stock.
EXTERIORS.....Full of atmosphere
INTERIORS ..... Ditto
DETAIL.....All good; Ray's bashful business will surely register again.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Poor boy adopted by rich manufacturer; concerns his initiation into society and romance.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,847 feet

Terming "Red Hot Dollars" a typical Charles Ray subject should clearly define it in everyone's mind. This is exactly what it is and take a crowded Christmas week house's word for it, that it's the real goods in the entertainment line. Julien Josephson has again given the star opportunity after opportunity to register those little human tricks for which he is loved the world over and Director Jerome Storm to it that every one of them stands out like a rare gem.

This time the star assumes the role of Tod Burke, one of many workers in a small town iron foundry. Peter Garton, the head of the works and a power in the financial world inspects the plant one day and by means of a well devised thrill the young hero saves his life at great risk of his own. When he recovers Garton adopts him.

There follows a string of sure-fire comedy scenes when Tod, now Theodore Burke Garton, comes to call on a girl he loves in his newly acquired automobile. Ray certainly gets over a lot of human stuff by his attitude of mingled pride and embarrassment over his new acquisition before his old friends. Enter more plot when the girl's father, discovering that he has been adopted by Garton, refuses to let her see him again, because of an old feud with Garton.

Subsequently there is more great comedy when Tod is introduced to society by Garton's ambitious and snobbish sister.

There is another good sequence when Tod hires the girl as his stenographer and chases another occupant of his office out on a fool errand so that he may go through one of the latest dancing steps with her. They are so engaged when Garton and his sister, who have just been talking of social marriage for their ward surprise them. Then, of course, Tod has to chose between love and money. He decides on the former course but a complete happy ending is brought about through the patching up of his quarrel between Garton and the girl's father.

Gladys George is Ray's new leading woman and gives a satisfactory performance. Charles Mailes, William Conklin and Mollie McConnell complete the cast of principals.

This Should Bring You a Good Many Red Hot Dollars

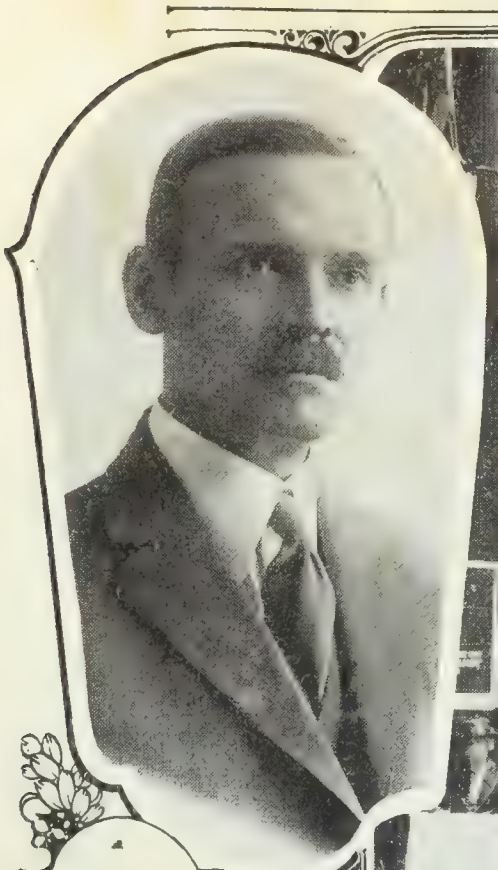
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There has been a lot of talk about Ray becoming too much of a type; that he brings no variety to his work. People may express all the opinion they want on this subject but it remains a fact that fans want to see him in his usual role just as much as they want to see Fairbanks or Pickford or Hart in their usual roles.

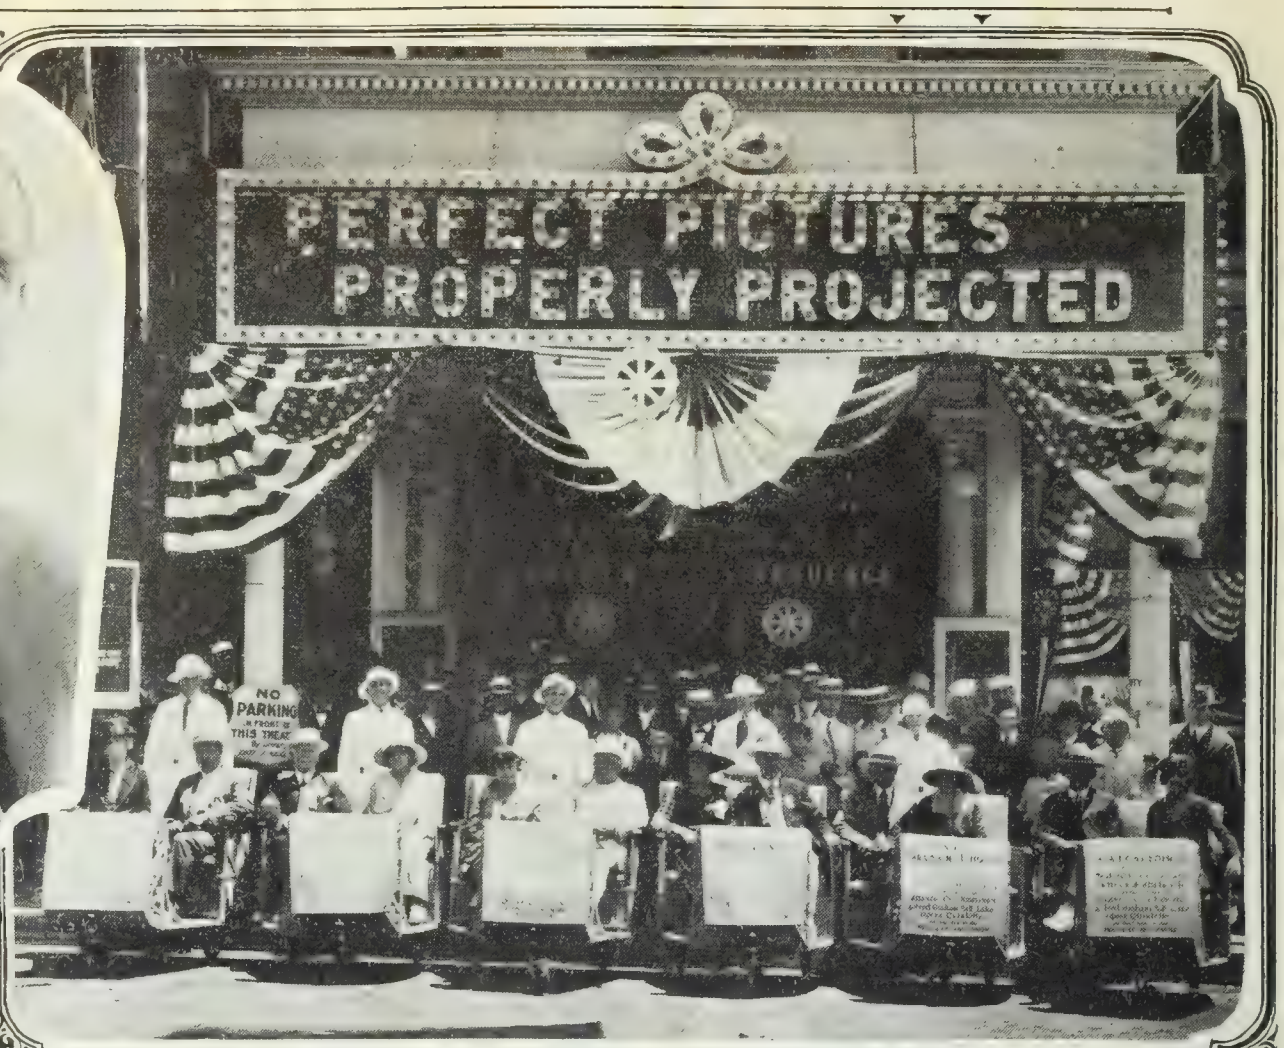
"Red Hot Dollars" is the typical Ray picture, yet it possesses enough plot and enough human interest groundwork to make it a winner. Ray's acting is going to be the source of great delight here just as it has always been and though some of his tricks may be old they still register.

You're safe in boosting "Red Hot Dollars" till the cows come home for there's hardly a patron that's going out of the theater dissatisfied after having seen it. Mention the author and the director and Ince's name too as this trio is always associated with the star and by this time their names should help bring the business.

Real Showmen - and Why



Geo. E. Carpenter Manager Paramount-Empress. Salt Lake, Utah



Paramount-Empress - Salt Lake, Utah

Many men believe that honesty is the best policy, except in business. A great many who adhere to that slogan have been successful, but George E. Carpenter is a showman who does not believe that the line should be drawn there. In his opinion, honesty, combined with sincerity and courtesy constitute the best policy at all times. Considering his achievements at the helm of the Paramount-Empress in Salt Lake City, Carpenter knows whereof he speaks.

Years of experience with newspapers and in the motion picture industry have enabled Carpenter to shape his policy. He knows the game from every angle and he is awake to the fact that the aid of press is indispensable to the show business. If you make the newspapermen your friends, he believes a good portion of the battle is won.

A statement of this nature from Carpenter is worth much, for he himself was a journalist for many years before he entered the theatrical profession and he understands thoroughly the psychology of and everything else about the editors and reporters.

Furthest from godliness is said to be the theater business, yet at mature age, Carpenter, the son of a minister, finds himself in it. Twenty-eight years ago, he came to the United States from South Africa. For fifteen years, he worked on various newspapers, occupying practically every position. And from the lowly position of leg-man to that of managing editor, no work connected with getting out a publication is unfamiliar to Carpenter. A year as manager of a magazine saw the close of his career, until the present at least, in that capacity. Applying his newspaper experience to the show business, Carpenter has made so great a success, that today he is one of the most talked-of showmen west of the Mississippi.

One of the reasons for Carpenter's successs in getting patronage is that he understands the value of publicity. He was the first publicity man ever employed by a motion picture exchange in the world, with Louis Marcus in Salt Lake, with the Notable Feature Film Co. After that came long and valuable experience in conjunction with the Orpheum Circuit of vaudeville theaters. "Real Reels" is the title of a publication he got out for the Notable Feature Film Company of Salt Lake City for two years. In it, he secured the confidence of the exhibitor, published circular letters and put over numerous advertising stunts. These paved the way for the success of many features put out by the company and furnished Carpenter with some more experience—a sort of link in the chain that represents his travel over the road from an insignificant position with a newspaper to that of manager of one of the leading houses in the Mormon State—among the leading because Carpenter is at the head of it.

Nor is the legitimate end of the business something new to him. He acted as publicity man for many stock companies that came to the city by the briny lake and was associated with the Willard Mack-Marjorie Rambeau organization. He has been manager of the Paramount-Empress for three years, serving at the same time, in the capacity of secretary of the Paramount Amusement Co. that operates the large chain of theaters of which the one he manages is a part.

Carpenter believes in publicity—for everyone but himself. In spite of his multifarious achievements, he remains the same modest fellow and it was with reluctance that he was willing to make known for publication the facts about his career here published.

During his management of the house he has accomplished two things. He has made the newspapermen his friends and he has established a reputation for honesty with his patrons, so that they know that when Carpenter promises them a big show they can pay in at the box office with the knowledge that they are going to get their money's worth.

Carpenter does not believe in catering to the wishes of the public as they are—he has taken it upon himself to shape those desires. Good music and good pictures rule at his house. Giving the audience good stuff will make it want more, he believes, and he goes smoothly along now with the confidence of the people of Salt Lake City not misplaced in him.

Fair treatment for everyone is another idea in which he believes. By furnishing his patrons with courteous service and giving the producer a square deal, he has built up a reputation that has his rival exhibitors green with envy.

CARPENTER'S COUNTERS

Decide on your policy and then stick to it.

If your hired help cannot cultivate smiles, get some who can.

Look ahead. It is not always advisable to grab all of the loose change in sight today, because there are other days to follow. By that I mean advertise honestly and then there is no come-back.

Courtesy costs nothing and is a good investment at all times.

Never give something for nothing. The public appreciates what it pays for.

You can't put anything over without advertising.

Ince Turns Out a Technically Perfect Picture, But Watch Out!

Hobart Bosworth in "BEHIND THE DOOR"
Paramount—Artcraft Special

SUPERVISED BY.....Thomas H. Ince
DIRECTOR .....Irvin Willat
AUTHOR .....Gouverneur Morris
SCENARIO BY.....Luther Reed
CAMERAMAN .....J. O. Taylor
AS A WHOLE.....Exceptionally powerful study of sea captain's hate and manner in which he planned and achieved revenge.
STORY.....Builds to a climax of terrific power which is so horrible to think of that it may sicken.
DIRECTION.....A distinct dramatic triumph; all climaxes excellently handled and the final punch done with the power of a master.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS.....Some wonderful effects
CAMERA WORK.....Best water stuff yet
STAR.....A wonderful come-back; expressions tell worlds of suffering.
SUPPORT.....Wallace Beery a superb villain; Jane Novak good opposite to star.
EXTERIORS.....Ocean stuff exceptionally good
INTERIORS.....Include great submarine interiors
DETAIL.....Everything technically perfect; should call this best picture ever produced from technical standpoint.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Questionable; some people may be utterly appalled by it.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,969 feet

This picture has never been equaled for thrills, sustaining interest, accumulative force and terrific punch of climax. From first to last it is the technically perfect picture. Luther Reed who wrote the scenario and Irvin Willat who directed deserve bunches of credit for their work in their respective departments. The handling is so deft that for the space of almost two reels the observer sits almost breathless anticipating something—wondering what is to happen but possessing no inkling. And then it crashes on him with dynamic force.

It's during the war. Oscar Krug, German-American, fought with his fists to prove his patriotism and then enlisted to become captain of a transport. His wife stows away on board for the first voyage. The ship is torpedoed. The wife is taken aboard the submarine by the commander while Krug is turned adrift in a boat. The wife is ravished, first by the commander, then the crew fight over her. The remains are thrust out of a torpedo tube.

A year later and Krug, in charge of another vessel, captures the submarine commander. Takes him to his cabin. Draws the whole story out of him by feigning pro-Germanism. Flash to two other officers of the ship wondering what's happened. Eventually a sailor offers captain's compliments and invites them to coffee in his cabin. The submarine commander is where? "Look behind the door," cried Krug, "I swore if I ever caught him I'd skin him alive but he died before I was through!"

Hold fast to your stomachs! There never was a more dynamic climax. They don't show you the German's body but it doesn't take a vivid imagination to see it there because they've certainly built this up in the most expert style.

Hobart Bosworth is immense. His acting where he draws the story of his wife's fate from the submarine commander, pretending gloating delight the while it really tears his heart apart, is more powerful than anything seen on the screen in a long time. And Wallace Beery as the commander is a marvel. Jane Novak, James Gordon, J. P. Lockney and Otto Hoffman are others.

The scenes of the submarine submerging with Bosworth on the deck are wonderful. The final destruction of the undersea craft is wonderful. The fist fight in the beginning is wonderful. In fact is the technically perfect picture.

If we were in war it would recruit thousands. But we aren't.

Let 'Em Know What's Coming; Then They Can't Kick

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Considering the character of the climax of this production the best policy to follow in advertising it is honesty; tell the people to expect something that'll make 'em forget to sleep at nights. This doesn't and won't sound very attractive but at the same time it will lure a lot of people to your theater and they won't be able to register any kicks if the climax raises a little havoc with their stomachs.

A suggested advertising reader is: "His wife had met a fate a million times worse than death from this man who now sat telling him the horrible details and gloating over them. He was in his power at last! He had waited for this moment an eternity of years. What punishment he could mete out would be too severe, what torture too harsh? Death by inches would not be justice———!"

Accentuate that last line. Spring it in bold faced type. Prepare them for the worst. If you don't use this argument, use one that accentuates the same features. It's the only way. And another line might warn them to keep the children away.

For the rest tell of Bosworth's marvelous performance and of Willat and Ince and the technically perfect work they have produced.

Great Mystery Picture With Interest Excellently Sustained

William Russell in
"THE LINCOLN HIGHWAYMAN"
Fox

DIRECTOR.....Emmett J. Flynn
AUTHOR.....Paul Dickey
SCENARIO BY.....Emmett J. Flynn
CAMERAMAN.....Clyde De Vinna
AS A WHOLE.....Great modern holdup man story in which identity of bandit is cleverly concealed until climax.
STORY..... Excellently put together with strong vein of sustained interest and many thrilling moments.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Good
LIGHTINGS.....Some realistic night effects
CAMERAWORK.....Commendable
STAR.....Registers nicely as the hero; work here should add to his popularity.
SUPPORT.....A capable cast and a very clever dog
EXTERIORS.....Include good auto speeding shots
INTERIORS.....Satisfactory
DETAIL.....Good
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Modern road agent mystery story with nothing to offend.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

Every once in a while some producer slips one over on his program that for sheer entertainment beats a lot of the specials all hollow. William Fox has done the trick in "The Lincoln Highwayman," the latest picture to star William Russell. Here's a picture that surely is going to give everyone complete satisfaction in the entertainment line because it is so downright cleverly handled from every angle.

To begin with the picture is of the mystery type, the action being centered around the workings of the Lincoln Highwayman, a modern bandit who holds up the auto travellers of the coast-to-coast highway. The identity of this fellow is not revealed until the climax and the picture has been handled so cleverly during its every twist and turn that it'll take a full-fledged Flynn or Burns to call the director's hand before he shows it.

Suspicion throughout is fastened on the hero and the web of circumstantial evidence is gathered so close about him that people are certainly going to wonder how he is going to clear himself. It was a great stunt to show him holding up the heroine and his rival just as a trick to prove a point of argument. After that you feel so certain that Jimmy Clunder is the real bandit that the subsequent denouement comes as a distinct surprise. And after it's all over you find yourself going back and wondering how they tricked you, and tricked you without a flaw in construction in the entire story.

The picture contains a lot of good, honest thrills, most of them generated by the highly sustained action of the plot and its various surprising climaxes.

There are a couple of sequences in the picture in which the action pivots about a dog that's the most human animal seen on the screen in an age. The sequence in which he assists Jimmy in the holding up of the heroine and the rival is, well, just too dog-gone clever for words.

The story has a nice vein of romantic interest and is to be specially noted for its absence of a conventional heavy. The real highwayman is not prominent in the action at all and he has no scenes with the heroine. All this is to be commended for the action has an air of reality that the omission of the villain helps to foster.

Russell fits into the role of Jimmy excellently and his entire supporting cast does fine work. It includes Lois Lee, Frank Brownlee, Jack Connolly, Edward Piel, Harry Spingler and Edwin Booth Tilton.

Talk All You Want About This; It's Bound to Please

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You can afford to spread out in advertising this for everyone is going to agree on it—that it's great. And the absence of all blood-and-thunder action is a strong point in its favor. There are some women who refuse to see pictures of the hold-up man type because there is such a lot of objectionable action. Here there isn't a bit. It's human as well as thrilling and mystifying and people are just naturally going to eat it up.

In advertising it a good talking point is the manner in which they've so cleverly kept the identity of the highwayman a secret. This could be played up to advantage and it will attract people, specially those skeptics who believe they can solve every story riddle offered them.

Russell of course should be given a play as should the author, Paul Dickey.

SCENARIO BY .....Coolidge W. Streeter
CAMERAMAN ..... Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Melodrama of the old school lacks a sustaining interest because the audience knows just what the next move will be.
STORY.....Affords the star a chance to portray two different types but outside of that doesn't mean much.
DIRECTION.....Straight stuff; allowed some bad slip-ups on the part of the players.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Not exceptionally fine
LIGHTINGS ..... Bad at times
PHOTOGRAPHY ....Could have been much better
STAR.....Got her characters badly mixed up at one time.
SUPPORT.....Hugh Cameron has the strongest part and Mitchell Harris was a rather unimpressive hero.
EXTERIORS .....Some pretty shots of a country estate.
INTERIORS .....A few had a "setty" appearance
DETAIL .....Titles crowded in where they weren't necessary should be removed.
CHARACTER OF STORY....Old-fashioned meller dealing with lost daughter of wealthy man impersonated by girl crook.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

"The Web of Deceit" is a good title all right, and they go right to it along those lines but there isn't a single thing new about Finis Fox's story. There isn't a new twist to lift it out of the rut and things just happen along so natural-like, that you are never in doubt as to what is going to happen next. An interest that is sustained throughout is essential for picture entertainment—that something creating a desire to see it through.

However, in "The Web of Deceit," after the first few hundred feet, you're sure of the ending. Throughout there is a continued presentation of old-time situations—the dying confession in which the girl crook finds her opportunity to secure her heart's desire and the complications leading to the disclosure of her true identity and her final convenient death.

Dolores Cassinelli plays the part of Wanda Hubbard and also that of her sister, Lucille, who in reality is the daughter of the wealthy Major Clark.

As Wanda, Miss Cassinelli is leading a life very much different from that pictured to her folks in the country. On a week-end visit home her mother dies, making a confession in which she discloses that Lucille is really the daughter of Major Clark. Wanda, however, switches the identity and presents herself to the Major as his long-lost daughter.

Various incidents give Wanda much worry about her discovery and when Lucille arrives in New York she applies for instruction at Roger Barney's art school where she meets Wanda. Roger is sort of an adopted son of Major Clark and the object of Wanda's next move. Before Lucille has a chance to talk to him Wanda persuades her to leave because she fears their resemblance will bring about the discovery she is trying to avoid.

Hugh Cameron, known as a pretty slick crook, returns from Arizona where he had gone for his health after a narrow escape from the police. He confronts his former pal, Wanda, in her room and in the struggle that follows she is killed and the wounded Cameron tells the story which the audience knows all the time. Lucille is proclaimed the real daughter and they end up by having Roger and shero clutch.

Use Your Own Judgment on This One and Be Discreet

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As long as stories continue to be written and pictures to be produced, so do they continue to come forth with the old dyed-in-the-wool melodraama with all the old situations rehashed and done over, and most of the time there isn't the slightest semblance of a new twist. "The Web of Deceit" is just one of those things.

And with it all there is a percentage of the so-called "movie fans" who like this sort of stuff. If you can number enough of them among your "regulars" you can probably get away with this one but if you are catering to a better class clientele who look for something new, something worth while in picture production—well, just use your own judgment.

Miss Cassinelli's name may have some drawing power in which case use her name in connection with the story and play up the fact that in "The Web of Deceit" she plays two distinct characters.

OUR OPINION

Leah Baird has in her new production a story that has been splendidly produced and has a way of holding the attention steadfastly. There are a number of thrilling events that have been well handled without giving one the impression of a serial. The star is called upon to portray a triple role and in each of the roles she is sincerely convincing. While there is some double exposure, it has been handled in a simple fashion that makes one forget that one person is portraying the two roles. Leah Baird has supporting her to good advantage Robert T. Haines, William B. Davidson, Alexander Gaden and Downing Clark. The story is an adaptation of the famous Augustus Thomas play and has been laid in the capital city of the country. The exteriors selected are beautiful and the interior stagings have been handled in a splendid manner.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

They'll certainly have to come better than this if they expect Miss MacLaren to be a drawing power, for such vehicles as have been handed out to her recently certainly won't add anything to her name as far as the box office is concerned.

A good part of the action consists of the old time "behind the scenes" sets with the chorus in rehearsal. There is so much of this that it becomes tiresome. The characters are introduced in such rapid succession that their identity is hard to establish. This is particularly so in the case of Syn de Conde who finally murders Dodo, one of the former chorus girls who had already captured a millionaire.

Mary MacLaren, as Becky, a former wealthy Virginian, decides that she must have money and the surest way seems through the channels afforded by a Broadway chorus. Forthwith she journeys to the big city and lands in the front row of the "Oh, Oh, Omar" chorus, which has a very successful opening.

Shero is recognized as a "new" one and between the acts is sought by Lloyd Whitlock, known well on Wall St. by day as he is on Broadway at night. Becky is getting along famously on her "thirty per" when her millionaire friend after lavish promises, fails to see the necessity of a marriage ceremony. Becky's hopes are shattered and she invites her dancing partner, Wallace MacDonald, to her home to talk things over.

While they are discussing matters, Dodo, who, though married to a millionaire is really in love with Wallace, is murdered by a former suitor. Circumstantial evidence points to Wallace as the assailant. Rather than tell where he was at the time of the murder and bring in the name of Becky, the accused man refuses to talk.

Shero's millionaire, now truly in love with the girl and ready to marry her, discovers that she was with Wallace at the time of the murder and immediately proceeds to misunderstand the relation of the interview and leaves shero flat. Robert Walker, shero's old sweetheart from the south turns up; hero is cleared of the charge and the millionaire comes back so shero is confronted with her three lovers. However, she forgets her mercenary desires and accepts Wallace.

May Get By as Small Town Stuff

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is just the sort of stuff that will go in small towns. They'll all turn out to see how the poor girl went to the city and joined the chorus, met a great millionaire and so on. If you have a theater in this sort of community you can go right ahead on this one.

If, however, your audience consists of folks with a knowledge of the better possibilities of picture production today, "Rouge and Riches" won't make an impression. As already stated, it's all straight stuff, been done time and time again with not a new twist or even a bit of comedy relief to hold it up.

If you want to use it try the following catchlines: "She sought a millionaire by joining a Broadway chorus but when the opportunity finally presented itself, love had its way and she married her dancing partner." Or, "What would you do if you were confronted with three proposal at once? There was a millionaire, her childhood sweetheart and the man she loved. Who did she marry? See Mary MacLaren in 'Rouge and Riches' at the blank theater."

Lacks Conviction for the Most Part But Will Make Satisfactory Program Offering

Benjamin B. Hampton presents
"THE SAGEBRUSHER"
W. W. Hodkinson—Pathe

DIRECTOR .....Edward Sloman
AUTHOR .....Emerson Hough
SCENARIO BY .....William Clifford
CAMERAMAN .....John Seitz
AS A WHOLE.....Has a few thrills but lacks continued interest and slumps badly because of extreme waste footage.
STORY.....Love and faith made basis of theme.
DIRECTION.....Good for the most part but wasted too much time on sequences of less importance
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Very good; unusual silhouette scene outside tent at night.
LIGHTINGS.....Sometimes glary on players' faces.
CAMERA WORK.....Acceptable
PLAYERS.....Marguerite De La Motte very pretty; Noah Beery handled character part well; others satisfactory.
EXTERIORS.....Appropriate western country
INTERIORS ..... Proper
DETAIL.....Ending unsatisfactory; could have made use of footage wasted in early reels.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Blind girl marries uncouth but faithful westerner who dies before she recovers her eyesight.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

In his story of love and faith, author Emerson Hough has truly human touch containing all the emotions to be expected in a theme bearing on love and faith. His character typifying "faith" is a rough and ready westerner with little knowledge of worldly affairs and manners but having a big heart and all the finer qualities of a real gentleman.

There is a rather tense moment when willun blows up the dam and floods the valley. They get in some rather good rescue stuff and quite a bit of realism. Marguerite De La Motte is a very pleasing shero and in all probability her performance in "The Sagebrusher" will win her many friends for she contributes a good share of pleasure to the production and has a truly winsome personality and is surely pretty to look at.

Noah Beery, "The Sagebrusher," has a friend Arthur Morrison, who advertises for a wife for Noah which results in Marguerite going west under the impression that she is to be a housekeeper. By the time shero reaches her destination she has become stone blind and cannot see the ugliness of the man who meets her but his kindness and tender care causes her to have implicit faith in him.

Through a series of coincidences shero believes that her husband is like Roy Stewart, a physician in the town, strong and handsome. This is brought about by Roy saving the girl when she is kidnapped by willun and lost in a forest fire. Then again when Noah marries Marguerite, he asks Roy to kiss the bride because he realizes the difference between them.

There are several complications working out of the situation with willun getting in his handiwork. In the flood which destroys the valley town, Noah is lost and in the end they have hero Roy and Marguerite fall in love—which they should have done in the first place and not drawn the plot out to such a state of inconsistency. Also shero regains her sight.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Benjamin B. Hampton presents
"THE SAGEBRUSHER"
W. W. Hodkinson—Pathe

"The Sagebrusher" the first of the Emerson Hough novels to be picturized will, no doubt, satisfy from an ordinary viewpoint but there are incompatible situations that will cause some discussion. However, the fundamental idea is a story of love and faiti which draws a realistic and, as far as the idea itself is concerned, convincing conclusion.

There are enough thrills to flavor and they should satisfy. A forest fire is very real and the flood scenes are all well handled to keep the interest sustained. The ending is rather abrupt and dissatisfying and some superfluous footage in the early reels might well have been used for a better conclusion.

If you have a clientele that goes in for the picturization of novels be sure to tell them that "The Sagebrusher" is the first Emerson Hough story to be filmed. Among westerners especially the matrimonial advertising idea is not uncommon and the situations resulting from such transaction are not at all improbable. You might make something of this by catchlines suggesting "he advertised for a wife."

DIRECTOR .....Frank Keenan
AUTHOR .....Gertrude Andrews
SCENARIO BY.....Gertrude Andrews and E. Richard Schayer.
CAMERAMAN .....Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Great audience-getting picture with good comedy stuff and heart interest moments.
STORY.....Shows star in dual role and builds nicely to wholesome, sentimental conclusion
DIRECTION.....Various episodes of s... generally well; could have made Tom's son more human.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Very good
LIGHTING ..... Effective
CAMERA WORK....Double exposure stuff so good that fact of star playing dual role is forgotten
STAR.....Gives two clearly defined characterizations; scores decisively in both.
SUPPORT.....Generally good with nice types
EXTERIORS.....Satisfactory even though some are obviously settings.
INTERIORS.....Include shots of real prison
DETAIL ..... Good
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Man wins through good deeds and generosity where brother failed by stinting.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

One of the cleanest, most wholesome, downright enjoyable features released—that's "Brothers Divided." And everyone owes Frank Keenan a vote of thanks for making it the delightful piece of entertainment property it is, for the star, besides appearing in a dual role, directed, and he certainly has done his threefold job up good and brown.

"Brothers Divided" contains a moral but it's not an obvious flaunting moral constantly preached about and poked up under an audience's nose. Rather is it a moral that creeps on you slowly. Then, suddenly, at the finish, when the last scene has checked out of the machine, you warm all over particularly about the heart and feel like getting up and shouting, "Here's a picture!"

The moral that good deeds and kind words get a person a deal more out of life than selfishness and a nasty temper. Matthew King, played by Mr. Keenan, is a mill owner and a slave driver. He employs women and children in his plant and works them almost to death's door. In jail, under a life's sentence, is Tom King, also played by Mr. Keenan, who has learned from long-suffering what it means to play fair and square. His sentence was partly unjust.

Matthew has told Tom's son that his father is dead. Then one day Tom appears, having been pardoned because of his great work in handling the prisoners during a fire. Fate will it that on the same day Matthew suffers a stroke of paralysis so Tom takes charge of the factory.

His son is ashamed of him because he makes public his prison career as he wishes to start square with his workers. And so the son leaves town with a check furnished by his father to study music. All the mill workers love Tom for his honesty. They love him more when he refuses to employ old women and young children but Matthew thinks he's ruining the business. However, the business shows a clear profit after a time and everyone is happy. The picture ends with old Matthew's heart softened by the sight of the good deeds his brother has wrought and by and by an awakening in the mind of the son.

Keenan gets the most from both of his roles, is thoroughly crabbish as Matthew and delightfully fine as Tom. Wallace MacDonald and Ruth Langston furnish a nice love interest while others are James O. Barrows, Gertrude Claire, Russ Powell, Mary Talbot, Paul Mullen and a number of actual prison inmates and officers.

They'll Mentally Shake Your Hand After This if Not Actually

Man alive, they're going to love you for showing this to them. It's the real goods in the heart interest line and everyone is going to feel immensely better for it, and thoroughly well entertained after it has run its course. Don't let yourself see it at your competitor's house for he'll take a lot of credit for having run one of the most delightful pictures of the year.

Yes, and "Brothers Divided" comes as a blessed relief after all these hokum pictures dealing with Labor and Bolshevism in which all the workers carry bombs in their hind pockets. You might point out that the solution of labor troubles, as reached in this, is just plain, common decency and open-mindedness, if you care to delve into such things. But "Brothers Divided" is pure entertainment. Book it for a long run and you'll find out that it reaches the heart and soul—and the pocketbook, too—of everyone.

Obvious and Far-Fetched Melodrama With Utterly Impossible Villain

William Farnum in
"HEART STRINGS"
Fox

DIRECTOR ..... J. Gordon Edwards
AUTHOR ..... Henry Albert Phillips
SCENARIO BY .....E. Lloyd Sheldon
CAMERAMAN ..... John W. Boyle
AS A WHOLE.....Concluding sequences of this are so long drawn out and terribly stagey that the entire interest is lost.
STORY.....Has a lot of loop-holes and could have ended several times before it does.
DIRECTION.....Savors mostly of the cheaply melodramatic; no subtleties evinced.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Average
LIGHTINGS ..... Mostly straight stuff
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
EXTERIORS.....Generally satisfactory; include good setting of Canadian village street.
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
STAR ..... His usual self but too obvious at times
SUPPORT.....Gladys Coburn and Paul Gazeneuve very good; Rowland Edwards as villain, bad.
DETAIL.....Some bad slips in continuity of action
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Man's ultimate revenge on villain who wronged and persecuted sister.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,000 feet

First impulse is to brand this as "ten, twenty, thoity" melo, but on second thought even those ancient works of the stage with a constantly "coising" villain and a much "poisecuted" pretty girl and long suffering hero, were managed so that the interest was well sustained until the last. "Heart Strings" has all the familiar characters of the "ten, twenty," including a violent villain who hurls the girl he wronged over a balcony, but none of the redeeming qualities of clever workmanship evidenced in those shows. It has the vices but none of the virtues.

The picture starts off pretty well in a little Canadian village where Pierre, played by William Farnum, writes music and plays the violin, inspired by his sister Gabrielle. Unknown to Pierre, Gabrielle has been wronged by Rouget. She believes he has married her. Pierre comes under the notice of Kathleen, a New York girl. Her fiance, Blake, resents her interest in him and plots with Rouget to discredit him in her eyes.

Pierre has saved enough to take him to the city but on the eve of his contemplated departure, Rouget is arrested for stealing. At Gabrielle's plea, Pierre supplies the money and liberates him. Pierre promises Pabrielle not to maltreat her "husband" and so he suffers the taunts of Rouget until finally with La Touche, a pastry shop proprietor who is ambitious to become his impressario, he ventures to New York to try his luck.

In the changed setting practically the whole business of Rouget's persecution of the girl and her brother is duplicated until finally Pierre learns that they were not really married. Then he sets out to find the miscreant who has gone back to Canada and there the picture comes to an end, after Rouget has received a beating and reformed entirely. Blake's nastiness is also revealed to Kathleen and she and Pierre are married.

Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub offer expert service in titling and editing to those producers and production owners who are alive to the fact that it is the titling and editing as much as the direction, the star or the story which determines the success or failure of any motion picture.
Productions shelved as failures frequently may be brought to success by careful revision of titles and scene arrangement;—mediocre pictures may be raised to the dignity of special productions.
It is in this connection that Harry Chandlee and William B. Laub offer "Perfection Service"—for the perfection of any picture: Editing, which is something more than mere assembling of scenes; Titling, which is more than mere makeshift assistance to action.

Even Farnum Admirers Will Resent This Story

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

William Farnum in
"HEART STRINGS"
Fox

Even the most dyed-in-the-wool Farnum fans will resent this story. The star has done some pretty fine things in the past but there are very few that will be thrilled or moved by this poorly done and very elemental theme.

If it has to be played a good musical program will help it out a lot during the first half as there are many scenes showing the star playing the violin. But it is impossible to see how the last part and the climax can be made to register.

So if you play this go easy in talking about it because many people will be inclined to believe that this is an old one—so old-fashioned is everything about it.

Spectacular Air Stunts Will Get This Through

"THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY"
Universal

DIRECTOR ..... Jacques Jaccard
AUTHOR ..... Jacques Jaccard
SCENARIO BY .....Not credited
CAMERAMAN ..... Milton Mark Moore
AS A WHOLE.....Has spectacular aeroplane feats as main appeal; fair amount of suspense and a few thrills.
STORY.....Made secondary in effort to get in air stunts.
DIRECTION.....Might have put more force into the action on land.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Scenes of planes flying at night very fine.
LIGHTINGS ..... Exceptionally good
CAMERA WORK.....Another step in moving picture photography.
PLAYERS.....Francelia Billington had little opportunity; Lieut. Locklear credited as the dare-devil flyer.
EXTERIORS....Some striking views from the air
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory when required
DETAIL.....Could well omit some of the shots of planes ascending and landing.
CHARACTER OF STORY....Slight romance makes frail foundation for aeronautic manouevres.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

"The Great Air Robbery" is chiefly a picture showing the possibilities and achievements of an expert flyer. Lieutenant Locklear performs some daring feats which have been caught by the camera with surprising exactness and realism. In fact, without the exceptional stunts of the reckless aviator, the production could hardly get by.

The foundation upon which they build up to the air stuff is extremely weak and artificial. Shero loses a war cross given to her by her aviator sweetheart. Upon this slight fact they work up a great sequence without even having shero look on the [illegible] which should be the natural thing to expect.

However, these little implausibilities in the story may be lost sight of in view of the remarkable shots of the aeroplane in action. The idea of having the pirate ship boldly marked with skull and cross-bones, may get a laugh. It doesn't seem logical that pirates would advertise their profession so openly.

You've got to give the producer credit for being up-to-date at any rate. It used to be the old stage-coach hold-up but now it's the "highwaymen of the air lanes"—presenting the old-fashioned pirates a la twentieth century. Even the titles are strictly 1920. Shero remarks, "I'll take a ship to town." Some scenes showing a U. S. Air Mail Service station are interesting.

Allan Forrest, an aviator in the U. S. Mail Service, in love with Francelia Billington discovers the war cross he had given her in the possession of Ray Ripley. Believing that shero has given the cross to willun Ripley, Forrest, after gambling away his savings to secure the croix de guerre, finally accepts willun's proposal to aid in holding up the midnight mail with the understanding that he will recover the cross which will be in the mails and handing over to willun the shipment of gold which is known will be aboard the plane.

Lieut. Locklear, Allan's pal, learns of his friend's mad adventure and starts out in his plane, in search of him. When finally he locates the would-be pirate, Locklear finds that Forrest's co-workers have doubled crossed him and left him stranded and in danger of capture by the air patrol. Locklear insists that Forrest escape in his machine. Eventually Forrest loses control of his plane and it crashes to earth, killing him. In the meantime Locklear, after having been wounded by the bullets of the air force, makes his way back to Francelia who seems quite willing to accept him as a substitute for her dead sweetheart.

Play Up the "Thrill" Idea But Go Easy on the Story End of It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The stunts and dare-devil feats of Lieut. Locklear which make up the biggest part of the production, are the pulling power in "The Great Air Robbery" and you can probably get a big crowd in by advertising some of the stunts of this daring aviator. His leap from one machine to another and his climb out to the rudder of the ship to repair it while thousands of feet in the air, should give them something to marvel at.

The air pictures show an advancement in the possibilities of motion picture photography and considering the difficulty experienced in securing these photographs the scenes presented in the production are indeed quite wonderful.

If your folks have not already seen some of the air pictures presented in news weeklies, they will appreciate this one more readily and for them the accomplishments of Lieut. Locklear should provide something new in the way of a "thriller."

Some Short Reels

"Why Men Go Wild," Christie

Women are said to admire men who have the courage to use physical force in subduing them, much after the manner employed by their ancesters who resided in caves and ate their meat raw. "Cave Man Stuff" figures very prominent in the story which was written by W. Scott Darling. Bobby Vernon is starred in the one reeler which is quite funny, but which has a theme that is far from new. There is an unusual and creditable finish, showing Vernon and Vera Stedman executing a dive followed by a clinch. as a matter of fact, however, the picture would have been quite complete without that bit which has been added after a similar shot, on land had been taken.

Short Reels

"Keeping Fit," Western Electric

Shows the various ways in which employees of the company amused themselves on one of their outings, and will prove of little interest to any but those directly interested in the affairs of the company. Some of the shots were very good, in fact, the photography throughout was acceptable, but they can't call this anything but advertising stuff and it is not particularly valuable from that angle either.

"Screen Follies," No. 2 and 3, Capital

Puns and Gags, coupled with cartoons, some well drawn, and others not so good, make up the new series of one reelers being turned out by Capital. The remarks, are usually clever, although in a few cases they are rather old. What features the issue, however, is the fact that the manner in which the reels have been produced—the way in which they are introduced and closed, is distinctly novel and the entire offering unusual. With better judgment used in selecting the material for the one reelers and some more care exercised generally, these subjects can be put over with much to spare.

"The Vagabond," Clark-Cornelius

You can't beat the old Chaplins. Most of the folks have probably seen this before, but they'll laugh at it again. It shows Charlie displaying the walk that helped make him famous. The expression that few comedians have been able to imitate successfully is also there, and the story is one that in addition to several exceptional bits of comedy business, registers pathos that serves to bring out the humor much more forcibly, due t othe contrast caused. Combining a good story, commendable production and Chaplin, this will again prove a hit.

Pathe Review, No. 31

It opens with a tinted scenic study, after which comes a portion devoted to the wireless telephone. Albert P. Cutler, former billiard champion illustrates various difficult shots, which are then shown as performed at one eighth of the actual speed at which they are made. That part will interest cue enthusiasts, for the spin put on the balls and the manner in which the strokes are made, are shown clearly. An animal portion and scenes at a factory, showing some of the work on textiles round out the reel.

"Tough Luck," Pathe

Knotted-tailed black cats, broken mirrors, cross-eyed men, ladders that loom up over him as he passes—in short, almost all of the things that are reputed to exert a malign influence on the person who is confronted with them, stare Snub Pollard in the face in this one reeler, directed by Fred Newmeyer. A considerable amount of chase stuff, much of it familiar is included in the offering, which has a poor story to begin with, if any story at all. It falls short of the standard set in most of the Pollard releases of this series.

"Gemini Ambrose," Frohman Amusement Co.

Comedies in which confusion is caused by similarity of appellations, are not so scarce, but in this one, the trouble is caused by the fact that two wives, twins, resemble each other so strongly that they cause a conflict between their fond husbands. The leading woman in the picture plays a dual role and gives a satisfactory performance. Tom Buckingham turned the crank and the photography is quite commendable. Elsa Bradford furnished the story for the one reeler which should fit in on your program in a satisfactory manner.

Short Reels

"A Story of Zinc," Ford-Goldwyn

Zinc, the manner in which it is mined, smelted and then put through various other processes until the desired product is obtained, is dealt with in another Ford one reeler, which is much like the preceding industrial productions turned out by that organization. To screen properly some of the bits in this was probably a difficult matter, but the shots within the mine and other bits have been photographed in reasonably good fashion.

"Charlie Gets a Job," Century-Universal

Charlie from the Orient, a Mongolian styled thus, and featured in this two reeler, gives an exceedingly clever performance in the leading role and helps greatly in holding this up. It will probably manage to hold its own in the smaller houses, for the little Chinaman certainly does do some very creditable work. There are a few bits of business that are funny, and the fellow who plays the chef, does some good work. Otherwise, there is little to recommend the production, which Jesse Robbins wrote and directed.

"Innocent Ambrose," Frohman Amusement

Fred Walters penned the story for "Innocent Ambrose," in which a mix-up is caused by an eloping couple speeding away in an automobile and Ambrose in another machine clutching a store figure, with a dress for his wife on it. A village 'constabule' chases the eloping duo, following the instructions of the girl's mother and mistakes Ambrose for the other man. Following considerable excitement, all ends well, as usual and everyone's happy. The photography is excellent and the offering will do with much to spare. Mack Swain is starred and as usual, directed.

"In the Soup," Universal

Well written, replete with humerous bits and staged in a somewhat unusual manner, this one reel comedy which stars Chris Rubb, will undoubtedly score a hit on almost any program. It takes Rubb out of his usual element, placing him in far-off Africa, where he must capture a lion to win the hand of the girl whom he loves. He plans things so that a colored friend, dressed up like a lion, will allow himself to be captured. Unfortunately, the scheme does not work out, for a genuine lion appears and spoils matters. Subsequently, Rubb is captured by a band of savages, and when he wins all of the king's possessions with a pair of dice, he is sentenced to be boiled. The lion appears, however, and after some comedy Rubb captures the animal and impresses the father of the girl sufficiently to win her hand.

"Dutch Caps and Costumes," Educational

Colored scenics are becoming quite popular and this one, consisting of shots of scenes in Holland and some of the populace, has much that will please. Unfortunately, however, the manner in which it has been tinted is exceptionally poor at times. The two closing shots are excellent and help somewhat, as do some of those showing the canal and wind-mills.

"This Way Out," Model—Bulls-Eye

A dog and youngster make it exceedingly difficult for Gale Henry, and her husband to secure lodging in this two reel offering which has several funny situations and which is generally, a very satisfactory slapstick comedy production. The featured comedienne does some excellent work, and the support is up to the mark. Most of the scenes are laid in none too well furnished apartments, and the spectacle, although not particularly refreshing to the eye at all times, will probably draw forth laughter.

"Bound and Gagged," Pathe

Geoge B. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot are happily united in the tenth and last episode of "Bound and Gagged," called "Hopely Takes the Liberty." Roger Hopely, Barlow's valet, is instrumental in bringing the two together after they have had a misunderstanding. Like many of the other episodes, this possesses much light comedy, and while generally foolish, offers the spectator a novel type of amusement in serial form. The finish comes rather suddenly and furnishes a satisfactory climax to the production.

"All Wrong, Ambrose," Frohman Amusement Co.

Not particularly strong in theme is "All Wrong Ambrose," and the incidents woven about the plot are not in themselves of sufficient merit to put this over. Mack Swain is his usual funny self in it and the supporting cast does some good work, but the manner in which this has been staged is not up to the standard set in some of the other Swain vehicles. Elsa Bradford wrote the story for the one-reel offering and Tom Buckingham was behind the camera. Swain directed.

"The Little Green Devil," Universal

Only one unusual feature is to be found in this slapstick comedy, built on a common theme with hackneyed incidents wrapped around it. There is a Swede comedian who figures prominently in the offering and does some good work. Three other principals are included in the cast and while their work is not bad, it is not at all times something about which to enthuse.

Slide Advertising

Awakes Interest from Exhibitor—Wants to Know Distributor's Statement.

A prominent exhibitor of the Middle West has sent out a letter which has been given rather wide distribution regarding the use of the screen for advertising, saying in part:

"I note that the Paramount-Artcraft has gone into the advertising game very strongly. A few days ago, I saw a slide advertising Billie Burke in "The Misleading Widow" and across the bottom of the slide was the announcement "She Uses George Washington Coffee," They are charging exhibitors 10c each for these slides.

"I am also informed that the Kuppenheimer clothing people are paying the Paramount a large sum in connection with some picture in which there is a scene showing a boy reading the Saturday Evening Post and he turns to the page of the Kuppenheimer ad. The Stutz car people, they tell me, are also paying the Paramount people real money for using Stutz cars in their films.

"I understand that they have opened a department to solicit this type of advertising, and I think if this were brought to the notice of the exhibitors through the trade papers in the proper way, it would mean a lot for producers who are not taking this kind of advertising

"What do you think about it?

When the attention of John C. Flinn of Famous Players was directed to the communication he said:

ington Coffee Co. used some slides, but we never had anything to do with them. They were used in connection with the Billie Burke feature, and were distributed by the coffee company to jobbers, grocers, and perhaps to theaters. I think, however, the grocers handled the slides. Certain it is that we neither distributed them nor charged for them. We inaugurated a double window display for grocers for the picture, and 50,000 were used for the benefit of the picture. Many grocers further co-operated with the theaters by buying tickets for the various theaters which showed the feature.

Seeking Information from Exhibitors as to How They View Showing Industrials

It is understood Famous Players is conducting a nationwide investigation for the purpose of ascertaining how exhibitors feel towards showing industrials. While the investigation is far from complete it is further understood that so far the results show that many exhibitors still have antipathy toward showing industrials because of what their patrons may object to.

The M. P. E. of America recently announced a deal with Universal whereby exhibitors were to receive payment for showing industrials.

Exhibitors Betrayed

Clark of First Nat'l Claims Producers Force Films Containing Advertising on Them

"American exhibitors have been deliberately betrayed by certain producers and distributors at a profit to the latter, for their unscrupulous breaches of faith and confidence, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars from the sale of 'convenient' advertising possibilties in strictly entertainment film to national advertisers, and for which exhibitors have been charged high rentals. This practice has grown to amazing proportions. It has become a stealthy, secret method of 'playing both ends against the middle,' a violation of all ethics, written or unwritten, which govern relations between manufacturers and consumers, and a dangerous form of capitalizing exhibitor confidence without regard for the exhibitor's moral rights."

This is the keynote of a statement authorized this week by R. H. Clark, general manager of the New York Exchange for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and a member of the Board of Directors for the national organization, in which he attacks the injection of "convenient" advertising into productions sold to exhibitors by producers and distributors as being exclusively entertainment film, and for which exhibitors pay the usual service rentals. The facts which he outlines, and the allegations he makes are the results of information which he declares has been imparted to him by exhibitors

Erstwhile Film Star Turns to Legitimate Stage—Picture Plans Undecided

Al H. Woods has signed Theda Bara, to appear in a play called "The Lost Soul" a melodrama written by George V. Hobart and John Willard.

Miss Bara has not been appearing in films lately. An effort made yesterday to ascertain just what she will do in pictures met with the statement "there is nothing to say at this time."

However, it is interesting to note that there have been frequent reports lately that Woods was about to form his own film producing company. He is also affiliated with Goldwyn.

Loew—Metro

Considerable Gossip as to What Effect Change of Control Will Have

There was considerable gossip in film circles yesterday when the official announcement appeared of Loew, Inc. securing control of Metro Pictures Corp.

According to the official statement issued by Metro there will be a close working arrangement between Loew, Inc., and Metro, and the Metro Board of Directors will be reorganized with several directors of Loew, Inc., appearing on the Metro board.

But some in the trade believe that other important changes will take place within the early future. Some believe that Richard A. Rowland will leave the helm to others. This is denied by Rowland's friends. There is also talk of an important change in the production end of Metro. Maxwell Karger is at present director-general. Recently re-

Seek Injunction

Nat'l Pictures Would Restrain Exhibition of "Blindness of Youth"

National Picture Theaters—the Selznick exhibitor movement—is seeking to enjoin the Foundation Film Corp. from further exhibiting "The Blindness of Youth."

National claims infringement of the copyright of the name "Blind Youth," a picture now in production in California.

House, Grossman and Vorhaus, attorney for Foundation Film will seek to prove that National has no right to attempt restraint of a production now in circulation when the former has no picture as yet completed.

The hearing has been set for Friday in the Federal Court.

ports from the Coast indicated that Karger intended to come East and produce under the name of Maxwell Karger Prod. Karger branded this report as "premature."

One of Loew's closest associates in business is Joe Schenck, and it is said that Schenck may have an important post with regard to the production end of the deal. Schenck is in charge of both the Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge Prod., which are releasing through First National.

Just how many millions passed on the deal no one will say. Reports vary the figure from three upwards. Rowland and his associates evidently felt very good over the deal. Rowland gave a champagne lunch at the Claridge last Saturday, but said it was "just some wine lefft over from New Year's."

In the official statement issued by Metro it was pointed out that "the merger will mean the closest sort of co-operation between Loew and Metro, with the Loew houses furnishing a certain and permanent market for the Metro product, and Metro providing a permanent source of material."

Loew at present is probably the largest individual exhibitor in this country. There are 119 houses owned and operated by Loew, Inc., 39 building and between 30 and 40 more whose policy and booking are controlled by the same corporation. Many of these are first runs. Next week the buildings on the northeast corner of Broadway and 45th Streets will be demolished to make room for his "State" theater. His lease on the New York theater and roof still has some time to run. His houses extend throughout the entire country, and there is no secret that he is after more houses, and intends to secure a considerable number, 200 in the total, at least. Two months ago he closed a most important deal with Ackerman & Harris.

Because of the marriage of Loew's son to the daughter of Adolph Zukor, there has been much gossip over either a working alliance or an "arrangement" between the Loew organization and Famous Players. But Marcus Loew has insistently and emphatically denied that there is any working connection between his organization and Famous Players.

McCutcheon Story for Warwick

Famous Players have purchased "The City of Masks" by George Barr McCutcheon for Robert Warwick.

The Zukor-Loew Wedding

The wedding of Miss Mildred Zukor, daughter of Adolph Zukor of Famous Players to Arthur Loew, son of Marcus Loew, will take place today at the Ritz.

Many prominent film folk from New York and out of town will attend the nuptials. It is understood that the gifts to the young couple include a tremendous collection of silver and cut glass.

in his particular territory, and which has been submitted to the home office of First National by theater owners in practically all sections of the country.

"It is a miserable, petty trespass on conditions which compel the majority of exhibitors to book productions without screen examination," he continues. "Cashing in without regard for obligation seems to be the actuating impulse. These same producers and distributors bellow mightily in the columns of the trade journals whenever a group of exhibitors in any territory proposes to meet an issue by joint action. In the same stenographer note books that contain the plaints against exhibitors you'll find letters to national advertisers, soliciting money in exchange for 'convenient' ad values in pictures they release to exhibitors on regular service contracts.

"It is time that a few more organizations like the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for New York State took steps to prevent a continuation of the practice. There may be exhibitors who do not care, but they are very few. In this territory I know of more than a score of instances where exhibitors have complained to exchanges, after showing entertainment films booked at high rentals, about the flagrant advertising attempts in various scenes. Invariably, they tell me, they have been laughed at, in an obviously 'if you don't like go to' manner.

"Would George Horace Lorimer, as editor of the Saturday Evening Post, permit any author who produces a short story or serial for him, to specifically mention Stutz cars because the heroine had to drive an automobile? Would he tolerate the publication of an illustration in which the hero stages a fight before a twenty-four sheet stand covered with a poster advertising George Washington Coffee? Would Mr. H. O. Davis, erstwhile executive and producer in the motion picture business, permit, in his present capacity as editor of The Ladies' Home Journal, the use of a line beneath the name of a prominent author, to the effect that the author used Pompeian Massage Cream?

"There are at least two concerns in the industry that should be taken severely to task by exhibitors for the advertising tricks they have deliberately slipped over in special feature productions. One of them is yelling, now, at what it charges is an unfair exhibitor practice and a studied discrimination against its productions. I have before me a report by an exhibitor organization in which it specifically charges this concern with the very practices I have cited. The report continues: 'They are now crying and begging you to run their films, and offer them to you free.' This, the report states, is the result of co-operative exhibitor organization.

"An exhibitor told me, yesterday, that twice within a week he has shown pictures featuring well-known stars, and released as special productions, which contained convenient advertising by big concerns. Another theater owner showed me a slide, sent him by an exchange as part of the advance work on a special he had booked with a popular star. At the bottom of the slide, so arranged that it could not be cut off, was a line stating that the star used a certain brand of coffee, which is regularly advertised in the national magazines.

"Never! It is more than that. It is another phase of the 'to-hell-with-the-public' attitude of men who seek authority, jurisdiction and confidence for the sake of exploiting it by means that are worse than unethical. And exhibitors are confidently expected to accept the bludgeon without a murmur. It would behoove the trade papers to instruct their reviewers to watch every production they see for purposes of criticism, and to state, in their reviews, whether or not the pictures contain any form of unfair advertising. This, at least, would serve to warn exhibitors in advance, and it would put an effectual check on the practice. There are a number of exhibitors in New York State who would subscribe to any medium which would tell them, honestly, whether various releases classified as entertainment had been sold out to advertisers."

Fight Over Print

C. B. Price Issues Warning Regarding "Log of the U-35" to State Right Buyers

Benjamin P. De Witt, counsel for C. B. Price Co., Inc., served notice yesterday on the Strand theater, Nathan Hirsh, Aywon Film Corp.; Standard Film Corp., of Kansas City, Herman Riskin of Boston, Mid-West Dist. Co. of Milwaukee, Standard Film Exchange, Detroit, Fitzpatrick and McElroy and J. L. Friedman of the Celebrated Players Film Corp. of Chicago, advising them that C. B. Price owns the negative rights to "The Log of the U-35" and that distribution of a print under any other title covering the same material will be subjected to legal difficulties.

De Witt claims that Price bought the negative and print from John Olsen & Co. of Copenhagen and that prints under the name of "The Lost Empire" are being distributed. These, he alleges, are duped.

Nathan Hirsh admitted yesterday that notice of the warning had been served on him by De Witt but added that he had the rights for the film for New York and New Jersey and that he had received the print from J. L. Friedman of the Celebrated Players. He maintained that he would continue distributing the film despite the warning. He said: "As I understand it, the negative of this material belongs to the German Government. We have as much right to use prints as any one else."

"The Log of the U-35" has been playing the Capitol since Sunday and Jack Eaton of the Strand has been playing a production entitled "The Lost Empire" this week.

Price became aware of the similarity between the prints Monday night and immediately took action.

Film Pirates Busy

Lawrence Langner, Patent Attorney Says Picture Business Is Hard Hit

Lawrence Langner, trade mark and patent expert of the American Manufacturers Export Ass'n stated yesterday that because of the carelessness on the part of producers American film trade marks are being pirated in a number of foreign countries. Langner is reputed as being an international authority on trade marks and patents.

The Export Association at Langner's request is appealing to the State Department to take action on the question of automobile pirating, but films are not included because, according to Langner the producers "are busy making money and don't give a damn!"

Select and Selznick Pictures are in difficulty right now in Spain where pirating has been done. The Goldwyn trade mark was appropriated in Cuba, says Langner.

It was pointed out that producers allow their foreign agents to register the trade mark in various countries. The danger lies in the fact that in case of a difference between the agent and the producer the agent retains the trade mark in his territory and the producer is powerless to transfer the business to some other agent for that country and sell his films on the old trade mark. Thus the original agent can hold the producer to an exorbitant sum for the trade mark privilege.

The Argentine Republic is an unusual source of trouble, said Langner. In mentioning experiences there, he charged a very well known film man with pirating.

Goldwyn Buys "Officer 666"

Goldwyn has purchased screen rights to "Officer 666" in which Wallace Eddinger starred some years ago.

George Kleine made a screen version of "Officer 666" some years ago but it is understood that all prints have been withdrawn from distribution.

In the Courts

The V. B. K. Film Corp. has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to the suit of Mrs. Sidney Drew to her suit for an accounting of sums alleged to be due from films made by her and her late husband for the defendant. The answer alleges that the corporation from time to time advanced moneys alleged by Mrs. Drew and her husband to be needed for the expense of making the pictures, but that they failed to produce vouchers for $1,100 advanced. The answer alleges that this sum was illegally demanded and was not spent as represented.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corp. has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to the suit of Abraham L. Erlanger for the appraisal of the New York Theater stock owned by Klaw & Erlanger because Mr. Erlanger objects to the sale of the theater property to the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. The answer denies that the net consideration from a block of New York Theater stock was as great as 2,500 shares of common stock of Famous Players-Lasky, and also denies that the theater stock depreciated or that acts complained of were wrongful or that the plaintiff suffered any damage.

On the ground that Aubrey M. Kennedy and Thomas J. Healy gave no consideration for the 1,000 shares of stock of the Kennedy Theaters, Inc., former owner of the Symphony Theater, the Van Beuren and New York Billposting Co. which has been unable to collect a judgment for $1,980 from the corporation, has filed suit in the Supreme Court to compel Healy and Kennedy to pay the judgment. The complaint alleges that the entire 1,000 shares of stock was issued originally to Healy and that the pretended consideration for the stock was the obtaining of the lease for the theater at $1,250 a week. Healy later gave half the stock to Kennedy. The complaint alleges that the rental of $1,250 was fair and reasonable.

Trailers for Theaters

Nat'l Screen Service Holds Exclusive Contracts for Material With Leading Producers

The National Screen Service will, beginning Feb. 1 offer a novelty trailer service to the exhibitors of the country.

National holds exclusive contracts with leading producers such as First National, Paramount, Selznick, Hallmark, Goldwyn, United, and Universal whereby these companies are to supply material of future releases far enough in advance to prepare the trailers.

The service will be conducted on a contract basis with a specified sum payable each month. Exhibitors with any number of changes a week will be supplied as far ahead as desired. The trailer will include a striking scene or close-up from a coming production which the exhibitor has booked for a certain date with an artistic sub-title.

Included in the organization are Messrs. Fleckels and Weinberg as well as Leon J. Rubenstein, Joseph Pollak and Leon Lee. Louis F. Rogers formerly identified with the Lee Kiddies has been engaged as general manager.

The new company, it is planned, will move from present quarters in the Longacre Bldg. to the fourth floor of the Leavitt Bldg. as soon as Fox vacates the premises.

Famous Signs Jack Holt

Jack Holt has signed with the Famous Players-Lasky, for a long term of years. Holt will play leading roles, and will make his first appearance under the contract in "Held By the Enemy."

Jensen Group Coming East

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Seattle, Wash.—J. Von Herberg, Jake Gottstein, F. V. Fischer, and Claude Jensen of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, First National franchise holders in the Northwest left here on Monday for New York, ostensibly to attend a meeting of the First National directors. It is also probable that there will be a series of conferences with big Eastern interests regarding building plans.

First National officials were reticent yesterday when asked whether a director's meeting was scheduled for next week. It was intimated that something was in the wind although nothing definite would be admitted.

The woman's age-old instinct of distrust for an unloved male warned her, innocent though she was, against this man who professed friendship for her. But she was already in his power, when his wife and her friends stepped in. From "Even as Eve," a First National Attraction.—Advt.

George Loane Tucker Brings Suit of Exceptional Significance—Makes Issue Between Independent Creators and Distributor Who Produces Other Films—Hearing in Supreme Court Next Monday

George Loane Tucker, producer of "The Miracle Man," in a voluminous bill, yesterday filed in the Supreme Court, brought action against Mayflower Photoplay Corp. and Famous Players-Lasky Corp. seeking redress for wrongs alleged to have occurred with regard to his production of "The Miracle Man."

He seeks particularly to prevent any further distribution of the production save when that distribution is made in accord with a clause of his contract which provides that he be given a certain definite advertising and publicity; seeks an accounting of the monies already collected for "The Miracle Man," and a judgment therefore against Mayflower; asks that the distribution

Tucker's Fight

Can a distributor who is also a producer, attempt to indicate that he is the producer of a certain, definite success, when in reality he is but the distributor, and when, in fact, he had nothing whatsoever to do with the actual production?

During its first 11 weeks "The Miracle Man" grossed over a half million. Tucker seeks abrogation of contract with Mayflower Film. Wants receiver appointed to protect his rights in "Ladies Must Live."

Tucker claims Mayflower has made fraudulent written statements regarding monies due him and on January first according to Famous Lasky statements Mayflower owed him $40,000.

Issue is raised that the director must be exploited to get recognition for his creation while star or player automatically gains recognition because of their actual appearance on screen.

Tucker claims neither Famous Players nor Mayflower risk a penny with regard to the financing or distribution of his productions. Also that he, Tucker, was offered the same distribution contract direct from Famous Lasky before he finished "The Miracle Man," and before he had signed any contract for a series of productions with Mayflower which, had he chosen to do so, would have eliminated the Mayflower entirely.

contract between Mayflower and Famous be cancelled with regard to all future Tucker productions; seeking an injunction against any attempt by the defendants to complete his production "Ladies Must Live"; asking for a receiver for that production to allow him to complete the picture; asking that his contract with Mayflower be annulled after he completes "Ladies Must Live" and to prevent the information being further given out that he is still under contract with Mayflower.

The bill was filed in behalf of Tucker by O'Brien, Malevinsky & Driscoll. Temporary as well as permanent injunctions were asked for, and an order to show cause why these injunctions should not be granted, was signed returnable Monday, Jan. 12.

In conjunction with the bill were filed affidavits from Tucker as well as from F. C. "Wid" Gunning, of "Wid's Daily," who had been called in by Mr. Tucker for advisory counsel. These affidavits make most interesting reading especially as to the various developments that resulted in the Tucker production of "The Miracle Man."

Incidentally some interesting figures relative to the business so far done by "The Miracle Man" are shown in the bill. Tucker's affidavit says that up to Nov. 29, 1919, the 11th week of the distribution of the production, that Famous Players had collected a gross sum of $538,-891.49. Of this sum Mayflower was entitled, under its contract, to $304,-061.13.

Tucker charges Mayflower with making written fraudulent statements to him of the sums alleged to have been received from Famous Players and charges them with failing to remit properly to him, alleging that approximately $40,000 was due and unpaid Jan. 1st.

The basic points of the battle between Tucker and Mayflower and Famous Players go direct to the question uppermost in the minds of many independent producers, stars, directors and writers: Has a producer, who is also a distributor, the right to attempt by inference or suggestion to create the general impression that a production especially made by some director or star working as an independent producing unit and only distributed by the distributor is part of the usual program offering of that distributor and, has been produced by the distributor.

Tucker alleges that under Clause 10 of the distribution contract of Mayflower with Famous-Lasky, made for his benefit, that he was to have certain rights so far as advertising and publicity were concerned, all of which result in his productions to be known as "George Loane Tucker Productions" with his name upon all occasions to be in the same size type as the title of the production "The Miracle Man."

Mr. Tucker, as well as Gunning, in their affidavits insist that these specifications were violated on innumerable occasions despite the clause in the distribution contract, and insist that Famous Players, despite the clause of their contract to make "reasonable endeavors to control exhibitors advertising" failed to make any such request in hundreds of cases. To support this contention they offer to file as evidence a tremendous mass of newspaper clippings and telegrams from exhibitors bearing out the contention made.

Mr. Gunning, in his affidavit, makes the contention that by failing to live up to Clause 10 of the contract, Famous-Lasky sought constantly to infer that "The Miracle Man," was a "Paramount-Artcraft Picture" instead of a "George Loane Tucker Prod." He pointed out that the Press Book issued by Famous Players-Lasky on "The Miracle Man"—the exhibitors' guide, from which advertising ideas and exploitation plans were presented for use in reaching the "fans" was particularly offensive in disseminating the idea that "The Miracle Man" was a Paramount-Artcraft picture rather than a "George Loane Tucker Production."

His affidavit says that the Tucker production was to be released on the Artcraft program, just as the Pickford and Fairbanks pictures had been released. There is no mention whatever in any of the contracts of Paramount Pictures.

Mr. Tucker, in his affidavit, points out that his purpose in securing Clause 10 in the distribution contract "was in order that I might obtain for my work financial returns commensurate with my ability and talent. I had found that it was impossible and is impossible for me to secure financial returns commensurate with the talent and ability that I devote to my work, save and except by capitalizing my name through exploitation, advertising and publicity in a way that I might be able to create a trade mark or trade name for my productions so that the name George Loane Tucker would become synon-

)mous with motion picture produc-ions of a high class." Further he dds that it is his belief that Famous layers by "endeavoring to appropriate the capitalization value of the work that he put into 'The Miracle Man' did this to the end that they might secure the advantages resulting from the success of 'The Miracle Man' to increase the prestige of inferior pictures manufactured and produced by it as Paramount Pictures and which cannot pass muster on their merits."

Mr. Tucker further claims that the productions he was to make for Mayflower were sold at a guaranteed profit by virtue of the distribution contract which he, Tucker, negotiated. As the contract stands he maintains that neither Famous Players nor Mayflower risk anything because Mayflower by virtue of a contract made by Tucker, is guaranteed $15,000 on productions before Tucker can secure from Mayflower anything except his weekly drawing account and that Famous Players do not risk a dollar because they receive from exhibitors, advances on his productions before they are to pay any money to Mayflower, by virtue of their contract.

Tucker further maintains that the distributing contract for "The Miracle Man" and his other productions was offered to him direct by Famous-Lasky before he, Tucker, made his contract for a series of productions with Mayflower. In other words that had he, Tucker, desired, he could have distributed his productions without recourse to Mayflower.

In his bill Tucker seeks relief from his contract with Mayflower because he claims he cannot, in view of their claim to his services, make a contract with other interests in the industry because of any possible loss which might result should legal proceedings develop because of the contracts which he had with Mayflower. In this connection he claims that although the defendants have violated the contract, and that there is no way in which he can recover judgment for money damages because the damages are irreparable and cannot be accurately estimated, that they are depriving him from making a living.

Tucker's final contract with Mayflower called for five productions to follow "The Miracle Man." Of these, one, "Ladies Must Live," is partially completed.

Tucker alleges he demanded in his contract and received in specific detail absolute and complete domination and control of every detail of the production and completion of these films. He maintains that he d'd this purposely and with great care in order that the entire responsibility for the success or failure of his productions should rest entirely with him.

The bill filed contains a duplicate of Mr. Tucker's contract with Mayflower and especial attention is directed to the clause reading: "that the corporation (Mayflower) furthermore agrees that no limitation, financial or otherwise shall be placed upon the said George Loane Tucker in the production of the pictures herein described." This, Mr. Tucker says applies directly to his claim for the right to finish "Ladies Must Live," without interference. It also makes clear the fact, he says, that he is solely responsible for the making of these productions whether they be successes or failures, which position he desires to assume with respect to his dealings with the exhibitors of the country.

He says he feels by the placing of this responsibility upon the creator, a direct benefit will result to both the exhibitors and the public.

Triangle's release following "The Clodhopper," is "A Gamble in Souls," for January 4.

M. P. E. A. Meets

Several officials of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., including Alfred S. Black, Ernest Horstmann, Frank Rembusch and Peter J. Schaefer met at the Astor yesterday to discuss the slide advertising situation.

Do Not Heed Price Warning

Fitzpatrick and McElroy of Chicago, who are distributors of the "Official Exploits of the German Submarine U-35" which is released in New York by Nathan Hirsh under the name, "The Lost Empire" have notified all state right buyers handling the film not to heed the warning issued by C. B. Price Co., Inc., who are distributing "The Log of the U-35" to cease distribution of the subject.

Fitzpatrick and McElroy have informed C. B. Price that if they insist on attempted restraint of the film that legal difficulties will result.

C. B. Price alleges that "The Lost Empire" is a duped print of his subject. It is playing at the Strand while the Price film is at the Capitol.

W. C. Cook, local representative for Fitzpatrick and McElroy is handling the matter for his concern.

Fear Foul Play

Investigation failed to reveal any particulars of Small's whereabouts to date. His family and friends thought at first he had gone away for a short rest but after two weeks had elapsed a search was instituted to locate him. It has been during the past four days only that any publicity has been given the matter. No word has been received from him and his friends fear foul play.

His wife authorized yesterday a reward of $500 for information leading to his present whereabouts. Some advance the argument that Mr. Small went away for a complete rest while others believe the mental strain undergone in completing the sale of his theaters was too great and that a nervous break-down followed.

The newspapers throughout the Dominion for the past three days have been trying to locate Small. He is well known in the theatrical business in the United States and information as to his whereabouts is requested by his friends.

Foreign Deal Pending

Australasian Films and J. C. Williamson to Merge in Antipodes —Combine Has 60 Theaters

It was learned yesterday that a deal is now pending, with the signing of the contracts a question of days now, whereby Australasian Films, Ltd. and J. C. Williamson both operating in Australia will merge into one corporation. By it the seven theaters now owned by Williamson will be taken over by Australasian which now operates 53 theaters there.

Under the terms of the agreement, work on two new theaters, one in Sydney and one in Melbourne will be started at once. These will be modeled along the lines of the New York Strand.

Millard Johnson, New York representative of Australasian did not deny yesterday that the deal was under way but did say that he had heard nothing about the actual signing of the contracts.

Sanger and Jordon, the local agents for Williamson maintained that they heard nothing about the deal.

Regarding Tucker

Wolper Expects Him to Finish Contract—Tucker Files Suit

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—The Los Angeles Times of Wednesday, Jan. 7 published an interview with Isaac Wolper of Mayflower, in which Wolper is quoted as saying:

"There is no truth in the report that Allan Dwan and George Loane Tucker will not complete their contracts. I have assurances from both that they will finish their present contracts, each having four productions remaining.

"Mr. Praeger of Mayflower and myself will leave for New York Friday and Tucker will return to the coast as soon as I arrive in New York."

This report appeared in the Los Angeles Times of Wednesday morning. About noon in New York City, George Loane Tucker, as noted yesterday brought suit against Mayflower and Famous Players-Lasky for alleged violation of contract.

"Woman instantly places man in one of two classes—those she would marry and those she wouldn't," declared the heroine in "Even as Eve," a First National Attraction.—Advt.

"Starvation" the official Hoover film will open its run at the Manhattan Opera House to-night.

It is understood that several offers for territorial rights have already been received by the producer and that this is somewhat unusual in view of the fact that film has not as yet been shown to any one.

Pollock's Idea

That "No Picture Producer Has th Remotest Idea of What Constitutes Drama"

A few years ago, Channing Pollock wrote a script which Met bought under the title of "In Vain Later, in conjunction with Renno Wolf it was rewritten and aga presented to Metro, under contra with the title of "The Come-Back Metro held it for four years a never produced it.

Later Pollock used the basic id for the big scene at the end of a 2 of "The Sign on the Door" whi is proving one of the big dramat hits of the year, and for which is reported very large sums ha been offered for the picture righ

And now hear what Pollock say

"About a month ago I decid that, to avoid any possibility trouble, I should buy back the sto of "The Sign on the Door" fr Metro. I went to them with th proposal, but the story had be forgotten and the manuscript lost. arranged the return of the rig by an agreement by which I w to write two new scenarios in retu for the old one. Whatever "T Sign on the Door" may be as play, it certainly is amazingly eff tive picture material. And its f in the hands of a company that ready had paid for it seems to an interesting demonstratio of long insisted upon contenti n th no motion picture producer s t remotest idea of what cons tu drama."

In the Courts

Supreme Court Justice Greenbaum has decided that Dwight Macdonald treasurer of the New York Motion Picture Corp. must testify before trial in the suit by William N. Brewer as a stockholder in which he alleges misconduct by the various officers including failure of the officers to collect obligations due the corporation which made it necessary to borrow money at high rates of interest. For this reason the court held that the examination of Macdonald is proper.

In the suit of Harry Samwick against the Blinderman & Cohen Amusement Co. a jury before Supreme Court Justice Newburger gave a verdict for $3,088 for the plaintiff and the court refused to set it aside and grant a new trial.

Supreme Court Justice Giegerich has dismissed the complaint in a suit by Darcy & Wolford, Inc., owner of the right to produce a play called "The Tidal Wave," against William Stoermer for an injunction to prevent him from using the words as the name of a moving picture film. The court however permits the plaintiff to bring a new action. The court says that because the character of the two plays has not been shown in the evidence he is unable to hold that the title is fanciful rather than descriptive, and since the defendant's film is based on such a phenomenon of nature any other title would not be appropriate.

Fight Pictures Barred

There was considerable interest manifested by some film folk yesterday over the offer of Wm. Fox to stage the Dempsey-Carpentier fight, offering $550,000 as a purse. Fox is to have the picture rights if the offer is accepted. Film folk point out that under the interstate act fight pictures are barred of shipment from one state to another, and can only be shown in the state in which the fight takes place. The foreign rights to the picture are expected to have a value, however.

Langner Says Register Trade Marks Before Entering Foreign Field

Motion picture producers who plan entering the foreign field should make it a point of registering their trade marks in foreign countries before actively starting business. This is the opinion of Lawrence Langner, international trade mark attorney.

Under the terms of the Berne Trade Mark Convention the first party to register a trade mark is the sole distributor for the product registered whether he is so authorized by the company or not. The countries which are parties to the Berne Convention and the terms of years for which a trade mark is effective in each are as follows: Austria, 10; Belgium, 20; Brazil, 15; Cuba, 15; Spain, 20 France, 15; Hungary, 15; Italy, 20; Mexico, 20; Holland, 20; Portugal, 15; Switzerland, 20, and Tunis, 15.

Chicago First Runs May Change

Chicago—It is expected that there will be several changes in the first runs in the loop district because of the passing of 50 per cent. of the interest of the First National franchise to Balaban and Katz from Jones, Linick and Schaefer.

The change is expected to give preference jointly to the Riviera and the Central Park, with the theaters controlled by Ascher Bros. joining in an equitable agreement of dates which will result in an even division between the two circuits.

This is said to be the first moving picture bankruptcy filed in the federal court in considerable time.

Bell in Town

Don J. Bell, formerly of the old firm of Bell & Howell, one of the pioneers of the industry is in New York stopping at the Astor. Mr. Bell has been out of the game for some years but is naturally very much interested in developments of the industry.

He made predictions that the present prosperity would continue and that the peak would probably be reached in 1923-24 in view of the fact that the War Saving Stamps are redeemable in 1923. "This will put in circulation approximately a billion dollars," said Mr. Bell, "and most of this money will be spent because the holdings of saving stamps are in the hands of the small investor or individual whose general tendency is to save on a small basis. Of course, the government may issue low priced bonds to take up some of the saving stamp funds, but the great bulk of this money can be expected to be spent."

The bill would affect all pictures depicting the activities of former convicts, bandits, train robbers or other outlaws. Those violating its provisions would upon conviction be subject to fines of $5,000 to $10,000, or imprisonment.

ducers vest the right of registration in the agent who controls the product for a short period of years, after the expiration of the period the registration right is vested in the agent and not the company. According to Langner, the product of that company cannot be imported into the country under the trade mark unless through the agent who originally applied for the registration.

Inquiries levelled at a number of the leading producers resulted in the information that the larger manufacturers are aware of the peculiarities existing under the Berne Convention and therefore insert a clause in all contracts requiring the trade mark to be registered in the name of the corporation.

Apparently, Langner's warning is more aptly applicable to the smaller producers and distributors.

Star Puts Over Initial First National Production in Good Style

Norma Talmadge in
"A DAUGHTER OF TWO WORLDS"
First National

DIRECTOR ..... James Young
AUTHOR ..... Leroy Scott
SCENARIO BY .....James Young and Edmund Goulding.
CAMERAMAN ..... David Abel
AS A WHOLE.....Gives the star a chance to display considerable versatility and has been given satisfactory presentation.
STORY.....Contains frequent conveniences and implausibilities that will get laughs; however, it does reach the high spots of emotion once or twice.
DIRECTION.....Deserves credit for welding a none too impressive piece of fiction into a fairly attractive picture.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Usually clear
CAMERA WORK .....Several attractive close-ups
STAR.....Made a striking appeal during emotional moments, especially; made the most of circumstances.
SUPPORT.....Jack Crosby not strong enough opposite for star's personality; capable cast.
EXTERIORS ..... Didn't figure much
INTERIORS ..... Conventional
DETAIL.....Unnecessary repetition in titles
CHARACTER OF STORY....Poor girl breaks into society after jumping bail on a forgery charge
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....

In "A Daughter of Two Worlds" Miss Talmadge makes her initial appearance under the First National banner and while the spectator will not be disappointed with the production or the work of the star herself, the picture really does not make the impression that some of Miss Talmadge's former vehicles have. Perhaps this is due to the fact that the main effort seems to have been given to the development of the plot.

The action advances at a logical pace and although there are one or two convenient bits, it will be forgiven for this is preferable to a session of tiresome and draggy sequences that add nothing but footage.

As a whole "A Daughter of Two Worlds" will satisfy the majority and especially admirers of the star. There are minor points in production and detail that may not be noticed by the casual observer except in one scene—that in the court room—the judge asks for the parents of the prisoner and forthwith two men make their way to the front. This got a laugh at the Strand. The titles were childish and a continual reference to "her other world" kind of jarred.

Norma is mixed up in a forgery case at the opening of the story and in order that his daughter may grow up to live a life different from that in which she has been reared, her father, Black Jerry, the owner and proprietor of a notorious dance hall, affects her escape with the aid of Uncle George, a life-long friend who furnishes the bail.

Shero is established in a fashionable boarding school where she is the room-mate of Sue Harrison. Norma and Sue become chums and during the holidays Norma is invited to Sue's home and hero pops up in the form of Sue's brother, Kenneth. As a result of the visit shero becomes engaged to Kenneth and on the eve of her wedding, her accomplice in the forgery case attempts to blackmail her but shero's father comes to the rescue.

Kenneth's father is in the contracting business and Sam Conway, his silent partner, in order to save himself from an exposition of his unscrupulous deals, kills the man who has threatened him and throws the guilt upon Harry Edwards. Norma had known Edwards in the old days and at the time of the murder was in his company. To save him from the chair shero discloses her past life to her fiance but love triumphs with the customary fade-out.

Should Please Admirers of the Star and Win Her Some New Friends

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

For admirers of Miss Talmadge "A Daughter of Two Worlds" will be sure to please, for the part played by the star permits of unlimited opportunity for a display of versatility, first as the daughter of a dance hall keeper, then as a meek little school girl and finally assuming a more mature demeanor when she is confronted with disaster.

This is the star's first production for First National and while it is not as pretentious as some of her former offerings, her work is quite satisfactory. It might be well, however, for First National to secure a better title writer than the one who wrote those in "A Daughter of Two Worlds."

You have plenty of opportunity and material for catchlines and they can be used to advantage for attracting new fans for the star and strengthening those she has already won. Make a special appeal to the women, for they like this kind of stuff.

Exceptionally Artistic and Novel Adaptation of Stage Play

Viola Dana in
"THE WILLOW TREE"
Metro

SUPERVISED BY .....Maxwell Karger
DIRECTOR ..... Henry Otto
AUTHORS.....J. H. Benrino and Harrison Rhodes
SCENARIO BY ..... June Mathis
CAMERAMAN ..... John Arnold
AS A WHOLE.....A decided novelty with wonderfully beautiful settings and wholly artistic atmosphere.
STORY.....Adaptation of well-known stage play; has barely enough force for photoplay material.
DIRECTION.....Has shown individuality and ingenuity in artistry and technique.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very beautiful
LIGHTINGS .....Splendid; some marvelous effects CAMERA WORK .....Meritorious indeed
STAR.....Tip-toes around like a true maid of the Orient; the part doesn't call for any exceptional effort.
SUPPORT.....Pell Trenton was in love with "poor butterfly" all right, but you'd never know it to look at him; Japanese characters all excellent.
EXTERIORS.....A wealth of beautiful scenes of Japanese gardeners, bridges and by-ways.
INTERIORS.....Afford a good deal of the novelty
DETAIL.....Titles too "wordy"; art designs very pretty.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Japanese legend affords basis for slight love story.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,000 feet

The popularity of the play and its star, Fay Bainter, will be one of the big pulling powers of the screen version of "The Willow Tree." And it is safe to say that Metro has given to the story a production lavish in settings and artistic effects. No effort has apparently been spared nor money stinted in a desire to make "The Willow Tree" the novel spectacle which the finished production presents.

There is a strikingly realistic Japanese atmosphere to the entire offering—the interiors with their paper-like partitions and sliding doors; the exteriors with their unique bridges and beautiful gardens.

Some truly lovely lighting effects are particularly adapted to this sort of film; notably the silhouette scenes. The photography is especially fine throughout and adds much to the splendor of the production.

Pell Trenton is seeking forgetfulness in the land of the lotus where he chances in the shop owned by an image maker, O-Riu's (Viola Dana's) father. Pell greatly admires the carved figure of a beautiful girl which Tomotada, the image maker, refuses to sell because of the mythical legend connected with the tree from which it was carved.

But Tomotado has a son—a son of modern Japan—who aspires to a college career in America. A more or less comedy tint supposed to reflect upon the son falls flat of humor and the character seemed superfluous. Tomotado arranges a marriage for his daughter whereby he will secure the money necessary for his son's education.

O-Riu disappears to avoid the marriage and in order to return the money which has already been spent, the image maker sells Pell the figure of the princess of the Willow Tree. O-Riu goes to Pell's home, hides the figure, and arranges herself in its place. Pell has been told that according to the legend the princess will come to life if a mirror is placed in her hands. At any rate hero is "from Mizzouri" and gets right at the experiment.

The charm works and when the call to war comes, hero refuses to leave his new found love but according to the myth the princess goes back to her wooden self leaving hero free to go to war only to return four years later and find her waiting.

An Especial Appeal to Those Who Admire Photoplay Novelties

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

First of all it is safe to say that there are numerous possibilities for putting over "The Willow Tree." There is the title of a well-known stage play, the name of Viola Dana, star in the screen version, and many opportunities for box office attraction and lobby display.

You can always number a goodly majority who go in for oriental flavor and regardless of its particular atmosphere you can go the limit on the novelty end of it. "The Willow Tree" is decidedly the most novel and fantastic piece produced in many months.

Here's your chance to get in a musical score for there are numerous compositions, relating to the Orient that your patrons will recognize and that fit in very well with the story, for instance, "Poor Butterfly," the favorite of the Hippodrome show a few years ago, but still a pleasant memory. Japanese costumes for your ushers will dress it up some more and you can burn incense to add to the Oriental atmosphere.

JOYCE of Pride

ALICE JOYCE

never was more radiant than as "Patricia Leeds" in this superlative screen production which is destined to be one of the really big pictures of 1920.

"Slaves of Pride"

is a powerful preachment against Love of Self.

It breaks down the fence that people erect about the person of wealth. It arraigns false pride—it glorifies pride of the right fibre.

"Slaves of Pride"

adds brilliancy to Alice Joyce's already bright stardom.

It begins the new year with a standard so high that the eleven months to come may not see it equalled.

Very Stagey Production But Comedy and Star's Fight Will Register With Some

James J. Corbett in
"THE PRINCE OF AVENUE A"
Universal

DIRECTOR ..... Jack Ford
AUTHORS .....Charles T. and Frank M. Dazey
SCENARIO BY .....Charles J. Wilson, Jr.
CAMERAMAN ..... John Brown
AS A WHOLE.....Very stagey production but star's fight and comedy touches will get it by with transient audiences.
STORY .....Plot is extremely elemental and fails to generate any great suspense.
DIRECTION ..... Never very realistic
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Average
LIGHTINGS ..... Nothing unusual
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
EXTERIORS.....'Avenue A" setting not at all modern.
STAR.....Is interesting; beats up a dozen men single-handed in the climax.
SUPPORT ..... Average
DETAIL.....Generally poor; all atmosphere striven for is terribly obvious; star not mussed up at all after his fight; night scenes brilliantly lighted and not tinted.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....More or less uncouth Irishman wins hand of mayoralty candidate's daughter.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,500 feet

Jack Ford produced "The Prince of Avenue A" out in California and from the looks of the east side New York scenes he had never been nearer the metropolis than the Hollywood studios when he staged it. The Avenue A setting is the stagiest one could imagine and what with its horse cars, a remnant of other days, and the modern clothes the leads wear, the spectator encounters a bad case of incongruity.

This may not stand out before audiences outside the city but certainly most people are going to catch the terrible stagey atmosphere that shrouds the whole production. When there are more than two or three players on the screen at one time, the action immediately becomes stilted, obvious and very plainly "directed." There's little that is natural about the running of the entire picture.

However it is quite possible that the low-brow humor introduced at various places during the action and the fight staged by the star at the climax will appeal to those audiences who just want to be amused for a while before they catch their train or make another sale. There's nothing new about this comedy. Most of it occurs when Corbett as Barry O'Connor attends the society dance given by the heroine. Barry is a model of sartorial splendor in his evening clothes but he asks for dances without introductions, tells one female her dress is too high, chats with the butler and invites the maid to dance with him. After all this the heroine orders him from her home! A most polite thing for a society girl to do under the circumstances—not.

But it happens that Barry's father is a power in politics and that the heroine's father wants to be mayor of the city. So the senior O'Connor insists that the candidate bring his daughter to an Avenue A racket so that she may lead the grand march with Barry, thus wiping out the young man's humiliation. Then there's a riot when Barry's enemy insults the girl and Barry proceeds to clean up the place, felling at least a dozen of his opponents with his bare fists. After it's over his shirt front is still a spotless white and Barry has a scratch on his chin although his knuckles are unharmed. At this show of heroics heroine gives the air to the society fop who has been tagging around after her and goes to Barry's arms.

Supporting Corbett are Richard Cummings, Cora Drew, Harry Northrup, Frederick Vroom, Mark Fenton, George Fischer, Johnnie Cook and Lydia Yeamans Titus.

Not the Picture for a High-Class House With a Reputation

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Certainly this picture has no place on the screen of a high-class theater that has a reputation to uphold. Its many faults quite overbalance its few merits when such a theater is considered.

On the other hand there is no denying that "The Prince of Avenue A" will have its appeal. And this appeal is directed largely to the low-brows and to a certain extent the transients. Of course, no exhibitor really likes to admit that his theater houses low-brows but many theaters do and before such audiences the picture will likely score and score with better effect than would a more expensive release with a better story and more expertly staged.

Transient audiences will also find something to their liking in this, mainly the comedy put over by the star during his initiation into society and the fight he stages during the climax which is also rather funny inasmuch as it is so impossible.

Good Thrills Surrounded by Story and Production That are Jokes

"SKY-EYE"
William Steiner—Sol Lesser

DIRECTOR ..... Aubrey M. Kennedy
AUTHORS..Aubrey M. Kennedy and Louis Lewyn
SCENARIO BY .....Aubrey M. Kennedy
CAMERAMEN ..... U. S. Army Photographers
AS A WHOLE.....Several spectacular air stunts stand out in otherwise very poor picture.
STORY.....Ridiculously funny with no continuity of action and little respect for plausibility.
DIRECTION.....Misses fire from first to last; all scenes handled in crudest conceivable manner
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Scenes in air fairly good; those on ground very poor.
LIGHTINGS.....Ground scenes generally bad; cameramen have paid no attention to sun.
CAMERAWORK.....Special stunt stuff in weeklies has shown better camera work than this although all thrills are fairly well handled.
LEADING PLAYERS.....Pretty poor actors, all of them; army officers have important roles in story.
EXTERIORS.....Include shots of aviation grounds which interest.
INTERIORS.....The real thing but lighting is bad
DETAIL.....Picture might be improved by capable editing; a number of scenes show flocks of 'planes in flight.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Villain's efforts to ruin father of girl who turned him down.

There's nothing at all to commend this picture except several spectacular feats of daring performed in the air by Lieutenant Russel J. Hunt, who is seen in the title role. He certailny provides a lot of thrills by his daring which takes form in changing from one 'plane to another by means of a rope, dropping off on to a moving train from his machine, climbing out on its wings time and again and rescuing the girl by the rope from a drifting launch.

Outside of heartily commending all these thrills there is nothing to be said in favor of the picture. A story has never been more amateurishly contrived than has that which is the basis for "Sky-Eye." Any attempt to point out all its faults would necessitate paragraph after paragraph. Suffice it to say that it has a villain who is relentless in his persecution of the hero, who tries in divers ways to kill him and ruin the father of the girl who turned him down.

But the plot is never cleverly developed, it possesses no semblance of continuity and the titles are forced into making outlandish statements to hitch the various scenes together by the narrow thread that holds them. Few of the villain's various acts are convincingly motivated and the manner in which he plays havoc with army rules and regulations is so ridiculous it's laughable.

The actors consigned to play the various roles for the most part aren't. Harry Meyers is the best-known in the case. He appears as the villain but it looks as if nobody directed him and one is puzzled at times to interpret the meaning of his expressions. Lieutenants Hunt and Nutt of the army appear respectively as Sky-Eye and his friend. Both are nice looking fellows but neither is an actor. Others who appear are June Keith, Thelma Kenley and Peck Miller together with a number of other army officers who stand around and laugh at the camera.

The photography of the ground shots is very poor and the work of the cameramen who photographed the air stunts has often been surpassed in special scenes enacted for news weeklies. A number of the scenes have been laid in the Texas oil fields and these, together with the scenes shot at the aviation field, are interesting at first glance.

Special Mention of the Thrills May Get the Crowds In

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Airplane pictures aren't common as yet and so you may be able to attract very large crowds by mention of the stunts performed in "Sky-Eye" and by following out the exploitation suggestions which the distributor has mapped out.

And there are some crowds who may just feel good-natured enough to laugh at the poor make-shift of a story that they will see in the picture and applaud the thrills.

But most audiences have been educated up to better things than are shown in "Sky-Eye." Even thrillers must be treated with some expertness to drive home their full value. And it will probably be the opinion of most people that they have been cheated after the picture has run its course.

Of course there is the possibility of filling your house by sensational exploitation but a full house, if it is dissatisfied, is even worse than an empty one. So even though "Sky-Eye" affords all sorts of exploitation possibilities, it will be best to treat it very carefully.

Rapid Action Sea Story With Any Number of Genuine Thrills

George Walsh in
"THE SHARK"
Fox

DIRECTOR .....Dell Henderson
AUTHOR .....Thomas F. Fallon
SCENARIO BY .....Thomas F. Fallon
CAMERAMAN .....Joe Ruttenberg
AS A WHOLE.....Considerably better than anything this star has had in quite a while.
STORY.....Rapid-action sea-story containing a number of good fist fights and a big thrill in dive of heroine from top mast of ship.
DIRECTION.....Generally satisfactory; has speeded up the action to extent that story loop-holes are not noticed.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Satisfactory
CAMERA WORK.....Some pretty good sea shots
STAR.....Registers well in a part calling for general agility and considerable use of fists.
SUPPORT.....Good with a number of interesting character types
INTERIORS ..... Appropriate
EXTERIORS.....Sea stuff generally good
DETAIL.....A number of weak spots in story and a bad slip in direction but speed of action covers these.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Sailor saves shanghaied girl from brutal sea captain.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

This is a story of the sea and has been keyed at a very rapid pace throughout with the result that its loop-holes will doubtless be overlooked in the excitement generated by the action. Without a doubt it is the best picture in which George Walsh has appeared in some time. He has the role of a fighting sailor and his athletic prowess and general all-around agility are given ample play during the run of the picture.

That the story, in some respects, approaches the ridiculous can not be denied upon a close inspection of its construction. That business men should see fit to discuss the important matters on a slumming party and request the private office of the proprietor of a notorious dive for their work, the while leaving the heroine, the only woman in the party, unregarded, is beyond an ordinary mortal's conception.

However most people will pardon this impossibility with the excuse that "they do it in the movies," and will be content to concentrate their attention on the many thrills that the picture provides. Of these the star's fist fights winding up with his encounter with the brutal captain on the deck, are by no means the least. Spectacular indeed is the high dive taken by the heroine from the top mast of the schooner, to escape the vicious crew and the star's escape from the police over a railroad bridge, narrowly missing being run down by a train, are further scenes that provide thrills of the heartiest physical type.

Walsh is seen as Shark Rawley, a sailor on the vessel owned and captained by the brutal Sanchez. The two are ashore one night when Doris Selby, together with her father and business associates, are on a slumming party. Sanchez makes off with Doris while Shark is attempting to rescue her from another, and immediately puts out to sea. Shark just manages to catch the boat and here begins a series of furious fights between the captain and his crew on one side and Shark on the other, over the girl. Eventually the ship catches fire (a fire which could have easily been put out) and all hands are forced to the water, from which some time later Doris and Shark are rescued.

The fights are all very well staged particularly, as said, the one between the captain and Shark. When this is over and the captain lies prone on the deck, Shark enters the cabin where the girl is hidden and she immediately knocks him out with a bottle. This scene is liable to get a laugh but otherwise the action should register as intended.

Walsh is supported by Mary Hall, Robert Broderick, William G. Nally, James Mack, Henry Pemberton and Marie Pagano.

This Should Give General Satisfaction

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

While "The Shark" will not likely create a new box office record there doesn't seem to be any reason why it shouldn't give general satisfaction to most all photoplay audiences. The fights and the thrills key the action up to a good fast tempo and the inconsistencies of the plot are not glaring because of this.

In advertising "The Shark" tell them that it is a story of the sea and that the leap of the heroine from the top mast and the burning of the schooner are among the picture's thrills. George Walsh has a certain following and should be featured, mainly because in this picture he quite surpasses anything he has done recently.

Simple and Obvious Little Picture With a Few Entertaining Spots

Edith Roberts in
"THE TRIFLERS"
Universal

DIRECTOR ..... W. Christy Cabanne
AUTHOR ..... Joseph Franklin Poland
SCENARIO BY .....Hal Hoadley
CAMERAMAN ..... John Leezer
AS A WHOLE.....Very slow moving little picture with some entertaining moments but failing to reach any climax.
STORY.....Simple, quite obvious and unable to intrigue the attention constantly because of its primer-like simplicity.
DIRECTION ..... Average
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Satisfactory
CAMERAWORK ..... Usual
STAR....Registers with appeal, youth and prettiness
SUPPORT.....David Butler brightest in cast; registers three or four fine laughs.
EXTERIORS ..... Generally plain
INTERIORS.....Include good hotel lobby scene
DETAIL ..... Fairly good
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Poor girl discovers fast society she dreams of is shallow and insincere.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

Here is a picture that in its simplicity is almost primer-like and which, though it has a few interesting and entertaining moments, fails to command the attention all the way through because of this. The story is well enough treated but a lack of illumining incident and an absence of a sustaining interest handicap it to no little extent. The whole story is pretty obvious even before the author has gotten into his plot and so there's nothing to do but sit and await the foregone conclusion.

Edith Roberts appears as Janet Randall, a department store girl who longs for a fling at high society. Quite true to type she overlooks the poor but honest love of Dan Cassidy of the traffic squad. When Janet's vacation time comes she goes to a fashionable hotel instead of to Sullivan lake and there at a dance she meets her idol, Monte Moreville.

After four days Janet goes to settle her bill and finds it a hundred dollars. This is more than a surprise to her as she thought the $25 she was asked for her room covered a week instead of a day. Monte comes to her rescue with the money and a proposition, that she pose as his wife in order that he may the better handle a blackmailing lady who threatens a breach of promise suit.

So then Janet tastes to the full of high life but finds to her disappointment that all its people are shallow and insincere and, after thus risking her good name, she goes back to the poor and still honest blue-coat.

Even the story material in hand is not treated as well as it could be. The sudden change in character of Monte when he proposes in reality to Janet is not in the least convincing. And Monte's "fast" crowd doesn't act like a natural fast crowd at all. It constantly assumes a stilted attitude that almost approaches on the conventional.

Miss Roberts' characterization is really the dominating thing about the production. Not a skilled actress by any means she, manages, however, to extract a good deal of sympathy and some humor from her role. David Butler's performance as the traffic cop stands out and it's a pity his part wasn't larger. He gets several legitimate laughs in the short space he's on the screen. Others are Forrest Stanley, Frederick Vroom, Lillian Langdon, Charles Arling, Oleta Ottis, Katherine Kirkham, Arthur Shirley, Ben Alexander. Nell Craig, Colin Kenny and Arthur Hoyt.

Slip It In Quietly and There Won't Be Any Strenuous Kicks

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you find yourself shy a picture you can slip "The Triflers" in quietly and there won't be any strenuous kicks about it. There are some scenes in it that amuse and others that mildly interest and although the picture is far from being a solidly dramatic piece of entertainment, its good points will likely stand out and get it over averagely well.

The central situation, that of a girl posing as the wife of a society rake, can be elaborated upon in advertising copy to advantage. This should attract considerably. Miss Roberts' name, together with that of David Butler should be featured. People are going to like this leading man a lot better after seeing his work here.

Gentlemen:-

I think the Pathe Exchange is to be congratulated on having the distribution of the new two reel Harold Lloyd comedies.

"BUMPING INTO BROADWAY" was one of the best comedies that has played at the STRAND in a long time. In both our New York and Brooklyn houses it was a riot of fun with the audiences, and in its originality, the cleverness of its titling, and in the wholesomeness of its fun, it is safe to predict that Harold Lloyd from now on will be just double the favorite he was in his single reel releases

Badly Handled Climax Spoils Good Effect of Picture's Body

DIRECTOR .....Kenneth Webb
AUTHOR ..... Amelie Rives
SCENARIO BY .....Clara Beranger
CAMERAMAN ..... George Folsey
AS A WHOLE.....Interesting and lavish production of novel plot; works fascinatingly to climax which slumps badly.
STORY.....Is motivated by a society scandal sheet; all the action has to do with a high-class underworld which is realistically pictured.
DIRECTION.....Speaks pretty well for Webb but he should have treated climax with greater sense of the dramatic.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS .....Good effects when necessary
CAMERAWORK ..... Noticeably good
STAR.....Is not given her usual big emotional opportunities.
SUPPORT.....Frank Losee as father has next largest part; all support very good.
EXTERIORS.....Unusually appropriate and include a number of Italian exteriors.
INTERIORS ..... Excellent
DETAIL....Star's make-up poor in many close-ups
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Girl on trail of professional blackmailer finds he is her father.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

This picture certainly starts off like a whirlwind and gives promise of developing into something extraordinary. But the pace is not maintained through to the finish. In fact, it starts hitting the chutes at about its middle and when everything has been prepared for a smashing climax and you have been led to expect something unusually dramatic, they proceed to just walk through it and hand you a big disappointment instead of a thrill.

The picture opens by introducing Stone and his confederates, the owner and operators of a blackmailing society sheet. Large sums are paid into the company by fearful women to keep indiscretions, either innocent or real, from being printed. Stone's only love is his daughter, Sylvia, played by Alice Brady, whom he contrives to keep in Italy far away from the scenes of his nefarious dealings.

Of course it doesn't take a great stretch of the imagination to see to what end such a beginning is headed. Sylvia, vowing to put the paper out of business, because it directly caused the suicide of one of her dearest friends, enlists the aid of Oliver Ellis, publisher of a reputable paper, and works against the scandal sheet with the ultimate result that she discovers that its owner is her own father.

The ending may be quite obvious at the outset but the interest is intrigued and held to the scenes immediately before the final sequence by the introduction of a wealth of interesting detail, all of which is staged and enacted exceedingly well. Subsequently, however, there comes a bad slump in the action due to padding taking the shape of scenes in which the players do a terrible lot of walking from one side of the room to the other, etc. Then the climax which has been approached definitely from the first fails utterly in dramatic power. They just walk through it. Sylvia condemns her father, then promises forgiveness if he will kill the paper and the last scene shows her in the arms of Oliver.

Miss Brady has by no means her usual emotional opportunities in this and doesn't give as satisfactory an appearance as usual because of lack of makeup, principally on her neck. The supporting cast, headed by Frank Losee, is very good and includes Richard Hatteras, Henry Mortimer, Edith Stockton, Bradley Barker, Nora Reed, Fred Burton, Alfred Hickman and Sara Biala.

Star and Exploitation Possibilities Are Good

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

From the point of advertising this is a very good drawing card for Miss Brady has come into great popularity during the last year because of her combined screen and stage work. The name of the author, the title, and the interesting manner in which it lends itself to exploitation are still other points in the picture's favor.

However, it wouldn't be good business to boost "The Fear Market" too extensively in advertising and publicity inasmuch as it certainly will fail to live up to expectations, owing to the very poor way they handle the climax.

You may be able to get cleanly by with it owing to the interesting subject matter and its unusualness but it is really one of those pictures that sends you home dissatisfied—just because they haven't gotten all they could from very unusual story material.

Comedy Dialogue Missed in Screen Version

Metro

SCENARIO BY .....Not credited
CAMERAMAN ..... Jake Badaracco
AS A WHOLE.....Amusing comedy situations; runs along in light humorous vein but isn't uproarious at any time.
STORY.....Adapted from the stage play but spoken dialogue is missed in screen version.
DIRECTION.....Worked in some good bits of wit and managed to keep things going most of the time.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Satisfactory
CAMERA WORK .....Quite pleasing
STAR.....Good natured but gets into a whole lot of trouble by telling the truth.
SUPPORT.....Ned Sparks good as English Lord; entire cast well selected.
EXTERIORS.....Pretty shots of Long Island country estate.
INTERIORS ..... The real thing
DETAIL.....Too many titles and about two reels too long.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Embarrassing moments grow out of a seemingly harmless bet.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

Like many adaptations of successful stage plays, more especially comedies, the screen presentation of "Nothing But the Truth" lacks the pep and the snap of the spoken dialogue. However, what the screen version misses in this way it gains in another for there is greater opportunity for realism and detail.

Complications developing out of hero's bet that he can answer truthfully every question put to him for a period of one week, afford ample opportunity for comedy situations. And his troubles are many. For instance, a couple of suspicious wives ask some very compromising questions about their husbands, truthful answers to which pave the way for divorces.

The director has handled the story effectively and made the most of the better spots, even working up a degree of excitement toward the end, but as a whole the interest isn't sufficient to hold at the same tension all through the six reels. As a result the production slumps badly in places and a good deal of footage is used up with chases and "in and out" stuff.

The scene opens up at the Country Club where Bob (Taylor Holmes), a wealthy society idler and three of his friends are holding a truth telling discussion which ends in a wager between Bob and his friends, each of them betting $10,000 that hero cannot go a whole week answering every question that's put to him, with the truth and nothing but the truth.

When a female member of the smart set appears on the scene Bob's friends start the ordeal going without delay by treading on delicate ground—a lady's age. They remark that she of the "fair and forty" variety, does not look her age and puts the embarrassing question to Bob but he overcomes the difficulty very nicely by answering in French that she looks as old as she is.

The remainder of the picture deals with the hardships that Bob goes through during the week that he is on his truth-telling rampage. Things sure happen at a house party on Long Island. There is the usual assemblage—the society crook, the English Lord, etc., but in this case the Lord turns out to be a detective. Ned Sparks played the part very amusingly. In the end Bob wins the bet and, of course, a heart.

Clean and Wholesome Offering Suitable to Family Trade Especially

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The idea in "Nothing But the Truth" is comparatively new to the screen and although it isn't quite strong enough to pull through six reels, you shouldn't have any trouble putting it over. There are many good comedy bits and some truly funny moments even if the humor never reaches the riot stage.

You have plenty of exploitation ideas in the paper put out by the producer and the fact that the play ran for more than a season on Broadway is always a big asset in getting over the screen version. Recall to your folks that Willie Collier was the star in the stage production and if any of the road companies played your town, make a bid for the patronage of those who saw the play.

It is safe to promise clean, wholesome comedy. It is the sort of picture that you need not worry about if you are catering to a family trade. Use catchlines along the following lines: "Could you manage to tell 'Nothing But the Truth' for one week if there was $10,000 dependent upon it? See how Taylor Holmes does it in his latest production at the blank theater."

astounding!

Love story? Yes—for romance will be pictured as long as there's a man and a maid and human nature is what it is. Here's a story that sets the heart to thumping with hope and fear, suspense and thrill, right up to the final delicious moment

And NEVER, has romance been staged in settings so thrilling, so beautiful, so astounding, so absolutely unparalleled as the love story of this Daredevil Ace and this scarcely less courageous girl, whom you, personally, will follow through every scene, in club room, country home, barracks and hangar until the tremendous climax comes two miles above the earth!

Not a mere "stunt picture"—get that!—tho' it teems with daring before which airmen who have brought down their Boches take off their hats—but a gripping heart story of the best there is in man and woman—of love and marvelous adventure.

AS A WHOLE.....Crook melodrama of average type; rather slight but well managed and interesting throughout.
STORY.....Interest is well maintained throughout and touch of mystery in the final sequence nicely handled.
DIRECTION.....Shows a keen appreciation of values of this type of story.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Good except for opening safe-breaking sequence.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,051 feet

"The Tower of Jewels" is a nicely done crook melodrama with a mystery twist at the end and may well be relied upon to furnish satisfactory entertainment to most audiences. It fails to get into the class of some of Tom Terriss' other Vitagraph subjects inasmuch as the plot is rather slight and required a good lot of building to extend it out over five reels. Again it contains nothing of a spectacular nature or anything startlingly dramatic. On the whole it's one of those many pictures that may be classed as average. It hits this level all the way through.

Corinne Griffith appears as Emily, known among her associates as the Princess of the Diamonds. Emily is one of the most respected of a large gang of crooks whose leader is Grimstead. She is caught while robbing the home of David Barton, a wealthy dealer, who has in his possession a famous diamond collar, known as the Tower of Jewels. Barton offers her a home and a chance to go straight and, touched by his kindliness, Emily decides to break away from her old associates.

Grimstead, however, is not willing and insists that she help him steal the diamond collar. She refuses, whereat he threatens to expose her past to Wayne Barton, her benefactor's son, who is unaware of her career of crime and with whom she is in love.

On a certain night Grimstead and others of the gang surround the house and wait their chance to enter. Wayne's cousin, who is in love with him and jealous of Emily, removes the jewel case from the safe to throw suspicion on the girl. The crooks enter but are frightened away by the ringing of the bell. It is the messenger from Barton's client for the jewels. He goes to the safe and they are not there.

Then the cousin confesses to having removed the case and Wayne confesses to having removed the collar itself as he felt sure the crooks would make another attempt at the safe. Grimstead is shot and mortally wounded when fleeing the police and with his dying breath relates of the gentle birth of Emily and says that she is just as good as the Bartons and fit to marry Wayne.

The whole story is cut of somewhat familiar cloth but the mysterious disappearance of the diamond collar in the final sequence will have many guessing and the clearing up of the situation leaves everyone satisfied.

Play Up the Mystery of Final Sequence and This Will Draw

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This picture ought to give average satisfaction though it is by no means anything out of the ordinary. However there won't be any kicks on it and all you need to worry about is to get 'em in.

A good advertising scheme would be to shape newspaper notices and any special advertisements about the mystery in the final reel. Relate of the disappearance of the jewels, the various parties suspected and the ruin that will befall Emily if they are not found.

Corinne Griffith has a certain popularity in Vitagraph pictures and her stardom is deserved. Maurice Costello, an old favorite is in the cast, and the mention of his name in the billing will doubtless attract the real picture fans.

Norma Talmadge in a Light Comedy This Time

Norma Talmadge in
"SHE LOVES AND LIES"
Select—Selznick

DIRECTOR ..... Chet Withey
AUTHOR ..... Wilkie Collins
SCENARIO BY ..Chet Withey and Grant Carpenter
CAMERAMAN ..... David Abel
AS A WHOLE.....Very much lighter than most of this star's pictures but the trick twist of the plot and comedy touches get it over.
STORY.....Gets away to a very poor start but picks up at half-way mark.
DIRECTION.....Registers the comedy business successfully.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Commendable
CAMERAWORK ..... Good
STAR.....Hasn't her usual emotional opportunities but shines well in light comedy role.
SUPPORT ..... Conway Tearle very natural
INTERIORS ..... Appropriate
EXTERIORS ..... Few but very good
DETAIL.....People may think husband blind for not recognizing his wife and June as the same woman; otherwise commendable.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Girl marries man disguised as an old woman, then wins his love as a young girl.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,555 feet

Very good treatment of the comedy angles of this has made it a pleasing picture. Director Withey has injected a lot of spirit into the last half of the picture and the results are that it holds the interest, though through entirely different means than the majority of Norma Talmadge's pictures. "She Loves and Lies" affords her none of the emotional opportunities than the authors of her previous subjects have been careful to contrive for her.

Marie Callender, possessed of a small fortune left her by an aged admirer, hears that Ernest Lismore is failing in business. Lismore had once rescued her from a burning building but had never seen her face. Marie on the other hand is quite in love with him. She visits his office in the disguise of an old woman and proposes that he marry her to save his business and that she may come into possession of the rest of her money. Desperate, Lismore consents.

He lives quite apart from his wife and Marie now finds herself in the position of loving a husband who is unaware of her real identity. So she poses then as June Daye, an artist, and manages very successfully to win his love in this guise. Then it's only a matter of letting Lismore know that his wife and June are one and the same and this is done with good humorous sense and the picture closes.

Miss Talmadge makes a very charming figure of Marie Callender and of June Daye and is at first quite well disguised as the grand old dame. But when she removes her spectacles and disregards her limp most people are going to fear for Lismore's eyesight as it seems impossible for him not to recognize her as the same June he is in love with. In this respect the picture again savors of the one-reel comedy.

Norma Talmadge's Name is Enough to Draw the Crowds

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Norma Talmadge in
"SHE LOVES AND LIES"
Select—Selznick

Norma Talmadge's position in stardom is undisputed and the mere showing of her name above a theater suffices to draw the crowds. It will draw here too, certainly when it is coupled with the splendid title, "She Loves and Lies." At the same time, however, the title is somewhat misleading. It suggests an entertainment of a substantially dramatic order which the body of the picture fails to give.

It would be diplomatic therefore to mention the fact that this picture is a comedy and tell the people to come and see that Miss Talmadge is every bit as good in a comedy role as she is in a heavy dramatic one. Catch lines written around the central situation of the story in a light style will also serve to attract attention and bring people to the box office. Conway Tearle is a popular leading man, particularly among the women, so it might be a good idea to mention him in the billing.

A Genuine Record of the Destruction Wrought by a German U-Boat

"THE EXPLOITS OF A GERMAN SUBMARINE —U-35"
C. B. Price Co., Inc.
DIRECTOR .....Former German Government
AUTHOR.....Former Admiral Von Tirpitz
CAMERAMAN .....Official German photographer
AS A WHOLE.....Ghastly closeup of horror of sea warfare.
STORY ..... The sinking of allied ships
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Wonderful considering the circumstances under which the various scenes were photographed.
LIGHTINGS.....Sufficient to catch all the horrible details.
CAMERA WORK.....Marvelously close views of giant ships sinking beneath the water.
STAR ..... War
SUPPORT.....Commander and crew of the U-35
EXTERIORS.....All open sea shots
INTERIORS ..... None
DETAIL.....Includes demonstration of how the U-boats worked during war.
CHARACTER OF PRODUCTION.....Terrible but it will surely attract.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....1,800 feet

These pictures, photographed by an official cameraman of the former German government during the war and intended only for the eyes of the German public, are the most gruesomely fascinating that have ever been shown on the screen. The two reels show the sinking of about six British merchant ships carrying supplies to the allied armies in France, having put out to sea from various allied ports. The sinkings were photographed from the deck of the U-35, the undersea craft which accounted for a hundred allied ships on one trip alone.

The sinkings are all approximately the same. Each sequence begins showing the U-boat on the ocean's surface, the giant vessel having already surrendered. A boat puts out from the submarine to take off available supplies of food and water and a bomb is placed in the hold. From the deck of the submarine the camera clicks off the moments until the bomb has done its deadly work and then the ship settles.

It seems slow but in reality the entire bombing and sinking of the ship is done with miraculous rapidity. When the bombs fail on their mission of destruction the submarine's deck gun is trained on the helpless craft at the water line and a few shots into the boilers complete its destruction. Torpedoes are not often used on a ship as helpless as these. They are too expensive.

Intermingled with shots of these half-dozen sinkings are intimate views of the submarine's crew. It was under the command of Lieutenant Arnauld de le Perre. The views include close-ups of the lieutenant and his aides crossing off the names of the ships they have destroyed from Lloyd's sea register and also scenes of the captured British captains airing themselves on deck.

It is ghastly to think that from all the hundred ships sunk on the U-35's trip, only five prisoners were taken! Considering this the scenes of the German crew disporting themselves in the water on a calm day strike one as rather satirical.

The camera work in the sinking scenes is remarkable. The water is always calm and there is no rocking of the submarine. At times the camera seems so close to the doomed vessels that it would seem that the photographer could have reached out and touched their sides. The character of the photography, too, is clear and none of the morbid details of each sinking is lost to the spectator.

The subtitling of the two reels was done by Terry Ramsaye and his wording of the inserts is appropriate indeed.

These Will Certainly Draw and Hold Crowds Breathless

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

These pictures will certainly draw the people. They will come for curiosity's sake if for no other. They will probably enter the theater with the idea that you are trying to put a fake over on them. But they will go out knowing that the scenes are as real as night and day.

They are so unusual that it is not probable that any exhibitor will receive public censure for showing them. But they certainly don't make one feel at all happy. In fact they sort of sicken the spectator. But at the same time everyone is going to consider himself privileged at having seen them no matter how ghastly they are or how ghastly their effect is.

Be sure to state in your advertising that the pictures are genuine, that they were taken only for German eyes, and that they were brought to this country quite by chance.

Nothing Much to Talk About Except Some Good Auto Racing Stuff

Edward Earle and Gladys Hulette in "HIGH SPEED"
Hallmark

DIRECTOR .....Charles Miller
AUTHOR ..... Clinton H. Stagg
SCENARIO BY.....John J. Glavey
CAMERAMAN .....Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Works up to a fairly good climax but the end is obvious at the very beginning.
STORY.....Features automobile racing and has slight romance that doesn't thrill; drags badly at times.
DIRECTION.....Deserves credit for the way he has handled the bigger moments and the racing sequences.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Not the best
LIGHTINGS.....Very bad at times
CAMERA WORK..... Satisfactory
STARS.....Carry on an annoyingly shy love affair; fill the requirements of their respective roles
SUPPORT.....No one deserves special mention
EXTERIORS.....Some good race track scenes
INTERIORS .....Studio sets
DETAIL.....Nothing terribly wrong
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Hero suffers much hardship for the sake of a woman he doesn't know.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,636 feet

The only thing that will save this is the racing sequence for the director has put over a few good stunts. One bit particularly is very well handled and furnishes a momentary thrill. A small racer, making 91 miles an hour, skids, dashes off the track and crashes into a tree. This has been well directed and the film has been cut so that the accident seems decidedly real and happens as unexpectedly as might occur in reality.

The titles are hopelessly hackneyed and the attempts at comedy are pathetic. The writer must have had a bad case of "wordorites" and his humor ran something like this: "He can't catch it; he can't even catch cold."

And where do they get these heroes? Great stuff! Folks are going to wonder how they do it. Eddie Earle, winner of the "Vanderbilt Sweepstakes," gives up his title and loses his qualifications just because some woman whom he doesn't even know, begs him not to expose the fact that her husband framed the race although hero had nothing to do with it.

Besides having such an impossible hero it is the kind of a story that the audience has all doped out soon after the picture gets started because the minute Eddie comes to Gladys' rescue when she is attacked by her chauffeur, all the "movie hounds" will know that a romance between the two will eventually close the picture.

Shero's father rewards Eddie, who is down and out, by employing him as chauffeur. Eddie finally tells his employer that he is Billy Brice, ex-speed king and disqualified from competing in any future races on account of an alleged acceptance of bribery. Shero's father, manufacturer of the Rhodes automobile, has a car entered in the forthcoming race. Shortly before the big day an enemy contestant wrecks the racer and the driver is seriously injured.

Gladys' married sister, the woman Eddie owes his hard luck to, arrives and confesses that she has begged Eddie not to deny the bribery charge which would expose some phoney work on the part of her hubby. This clears the winner's name and he gets his entry card in time to go in and win the race for the Rhodes company.

Play Up the Sport Idea and Make Special Appeal to the Men

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

An audience will probably pass this off as "fairly good" and the thing that you should confine your promises to is the auto sequence which is the best thing in the production. You can say it contains some real race track atmosphere with all the excitement and confusion which is part of the big races. This part has been well photographed and there are some good shots taken on the track with the machines in action.

Make your appeal to the men folks. They will be interested from the sport end of it and for the women you can say something about hero winning the race and winning the girl, or work up some catchlines which you think are best suited to win your folks' attention.

If you care to use the names of the players give Edward Earle his share of publicity. In case you have played any of Vitagraph's O'Henry pictures, your patrons will recall Earle as the pleasing hero of these films. Miss Hulette's name may be familiar although she has not done very much recently.

Some Short Reels

"Paramount Industrial Magazine," Famous Players

Industrial reels are now being produced by Famous in conjunction with various organizations and are being released to the exhibitors without cost. These productions are being distributed as advertising matter, and the first picture of the series concerns the three pointed suspension spring now used on automobiles. As a matter of fact, it is more in the nature of a scenic production than an industrial one, for it consists almost entirely of shots showing the travel of the modern touring car over the trail used by gold seekers in the days of '49. Some of the stuff is quite impressive and there is not too great a mention of the Overland company, which is using this as publicity matter. A few of the shots, however, are not especially good. P. M. Felton furnished a short animated cartoon which is appended.

"Red Hot Hottentots," Pathe

Whatever the cause is, most of the recent Snub Pollard releases seem to show a falling off in quality. This one has little that is laugh provoking, there being few incidents or bits that measure up to the desired mark. For some reason or other, they have failed to get humor out of matter, which although not very new, can be handled so as to go across. This will find the going troublesome.

Pathe Review, No. 32

If you are in the habit of running some sort of a weekly magazine, made up of parts of different weeklies, you should find room for some of this. It starts with a colored scenic bit, after which comes some footage devoted to lighthouses, some stuff about steel and scenes showing the capture of an alligator and its arrival in a pond in the New York Zoo.

"The Speakeasy," Sennett-Paramount

Mack Sennett has taken the speakeasy, the popular indoor sport of prohibition times, and has contrived one of his best burlesques about it in this two-reeler. It will bring a lot of laughs due to the various wildly impossible contraptions that the proprietor of the speakeasy uses to serve his patrons, and due to the divers underhanded means by which his patrons attempt to get away with more than their share. While this phase is more inventive than the wild slapstick battle which takes place in the last reel, it remains for this old-fashioned knockabout stuff to bring the most laughs. The two phases combine to make a typical Sennett comedy and most everyone will enjoy it. Charlie Murray is the proprietor of the speakeasy, Ben Turpin and Chester Conklin are two of the customers, with Kalla Pasha and Marie Prevost helping along in the fun.

"The Chilkat Cubs," Educational

Ralph E. Yarger is credited with the manipulation of the camera during the screening of this Robert C. Bruce one-reeler, which is interesting and novel. It is rich in the natural, mountain settings provided by Alaska, and concerns a pair of bear cubs. Numerous scenes show these animals frisking about, and are quite unusual. The titles are light, and have been written in fine style, there being no weak or overdrawn attemps at providing too much humor. Closing are a few shots showing the quadrupeds rolling over each other. This will appeal, as will many other bits in the production, which is sure to hold its own, and will undoubtedly strengthen your bill.

"The Tiny Kingdom of Montenegro," Red Cross—Educa'l

In many of the former issues included in the Red Cross Travel Series the photography has been little over which to become enthusiastic, but there is a great improvement in this. It has several interesting studies of the people of Montenegro, showing their condition at present, one of poverty. Audiences may not like the spectacle of the misery existing there, which is about the only drawback to booking this.

"Darn that Stocking," Goldwyn

Enough material to make an acceptable one-reeler was included in this, but in stretching it another reel, they slowed up the story, and failed to make it more effective. As a matter of fact, there is nothing startling about this, looked upon from any angle, and it is extremely doubtful as to whether it can get across. Neal Burns and Marie Eline are the featured players and Jack Laver directed. It tells of a newly-wed couple, whose happiness is marred by one of the rejected suitors of the young wife. The latter attempts to disrupt the little family, but is foiled after causing a quarrel between the bride and groom.

Short Reels

"The Little Dears," National—Goldwyn

Well photographed and produced in good fashion, "The Little Dears," a two-reel comedy which features Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven, lacks a strong story. Although several incidents in it are funny, it is not up to the mark set in some of the other Carter De Haven subjects. The principals did their usually good work and William Seiter who directed held up his end efficiently, but it is doubtful whether that will be enough to get this over. Incidentally, stories similar to this one have been used before, the idea of bluffing the boss to go out on a hot day, and then being caught, not being very novel.

"African Lions and American Beauties," Universal

Jimmy Austin and Esther Woods are announced as the featured performers in this two-reel Century comedy which has some novelty in that three lions prowl about and act in a tame manner. Austin has very little to do in the production and the leading woman is also out of the foreground for a considerable part of the time. Fred C. Fishback is credited with writing this, but it is difficult to see just what he wrote, for there is hardly any story at all—in fact, what little plot was begun, was left unfinished. This is nothing but a number of bits of business joined together into a sort of patchquilt.

"Looking for Trouble," Pathe

Fistic battles in which the hero first takes a beating, and then suddenly shoots over the sleep-producing blow, are not unusual in films, but in this, Snub Pollard, who has just that to do, puts over what is likely to prove a hit. The manner in which the reel has been put on, the various bits and all else combine in making it a most satisfactory offering. Ending in a novel manner, this will please in spite of the fact that some of it is not new. It's good stuff.

"A Woman in Grey," Serico

Beginning in a most mysterious manner, "A Woman in Grey," which stars Arline Pretty and features Henry G. Sell, becomes somewhat more complicated for a few reels, but after that evolves itself into a string of events that prolong the affair and furnish the material for the 15 episodes. The camera work is very good most of the time. As far as the manner in which the different episodes end is concerned, there is little to be desired. After the first few reels, however, but one thing is really left to be cleared up —the identity of Ruth Hope, the "Woman in Grey," played by Arline Pretty. The mystery attached to her will probably serve to keep the spectator in suspense, especially as the solution is promised again and again, but cleverly delayed. C. N. and A. M. Williamson wrote the story while Walter Richard Hall furnished the scenario and James Vincent directed. Included in the cast are James Heenan, Margaret Fielding, Fred Jones, Ann Brody, Jack Newton, Jack Manning, Walter Chapin and others. The first five episodes are called, respectively, "The House of Mystery," "The Dagger of Death," "The Trap of Steel," "The Strangle Knot" and "The Chasm of Fear."

"It's a Hard Life," Pathe

Possessing a wealth of humorous incidents, "It's a Hard Life," starring Snub Pollard, in spite of the fact that it does not have a very strong plot, is more than likely to provoke mirth. Pollard is quite funny in this and the court scene, the barber shop portion and one or two others can be depended upon to cause your crowd to laugh heartily. The photography is good and the production one that can fit in on most any bill.

"Dawning an Uprising," Universal

Lee Moran steps out of his usual character in "Dawning an Uprising," an offering in which Bolshevism has become a society craze and Eddie Lyons is instrumental in eliminating the fad from the home of his sweetheart. Lyons hires a troupe of hobos, led by Moran the chief tramp, introducing them as Bolsheviki. Soon the shabby gentry completely disgust the ladies present but refuse to leave. At the suggestion of a bath, however, they quickly depart. A good one-reeler.

"Stop That Wedding," Universal

You will be perfectly safe in booking this single reel comedy, for it is one of the best Lyons and Moran have done in a long while. It is well acted, finely produced and possesses several laughs. Eddie Lyons is about to be married as the picture starts, and while he is facing the altar with his prospective bride, Charlotte Merriam, Lee Moran, the rejected suitor bursts into a fit of weeping. He is ejected, but returns and time and time again attempts to break up the ceremony so that he makes the girl his wife. After being tossed out for attempting in different ways to put an end to the wedding, Lyons, Moran, Charlotte Merriam and the preacher are escorted to jail. Lee has to look on while the matrimonial knot is tied.

"No Coma in Acoma," Chester-Outing

For a current release subject, C. L. Chester has selected an Indian village in New Mexico, and has screened it finely together with its inhabitants. Unlike the "Injuns" usually seen on the screen, those in this production, except for their dark skins, bear quite a resemblance to white men. There are bits showing the children at play, at school, and then the people who reside in Acoma performing parts of the daily routine. Closing is a bit showing a little girl rolling her eyes, a la Theda Bara.

Screenics No. 1, Chester

Remarks of a light nature, touching on current subjects, are rather common in films at present, there being several organizations turning out reels devoted exclusively to material of this nature. In conjunction with the Field and Stream Magazine, C. L. Chester is turning out a new one reeler, which consists of about 50 per cent. of these comments, but he has gained a march on the others by securing the services, for the first issue at any rate, of Don Marquis. The latter is a humorist whose wit is of the subtle sort, and comments on prohibition in the portion styled "Is Prohibition a Dry Subject?" "Hattie's Hoodoo,' 'a part dealing with one of the elephants in Central park, is of merit, several scenes of the animals in Africa adding novelty.

"The Moon Riders," Universal

Usually, some mystery furnishes the plot for a serial. If there is no mystery, it is built about some sort of a search for hidden valuables. Almost always it includes some unknown quantity, that causes the person who sees it to ponder over the identity of him, her or it, or the rendezvous of said quantity. However, "The Moon Riders," featuring Art Acord, possesses no such element. It is a western of the type usually handled in five reels, and dealing with the struggle of a group of homesteaders against an unscrupulous band that desires to profit through obsolete Spanish land grants. It should score with serial patrons. At least, "The Death Stampede," and "The Masked Maurauders," the first two episodes, give that impression.

"A Lady's Tailor," Sennett—Famous

There may have been just cause to feel a little bit disappointed at some of Mack Sennett's recent comedy releases. He has seemed, recently, to have fallen out of his stride. "A Lady's Tailor," however, brings him back sprinting again and constantly throughout its considerable footage there is flash after flash of the comedy incident, both spectacular and minor, that brought him the fame he enjoys today. The picture is divided into various sequences, each quite able to stand alone, and each one has some prominent element that makes for comedy success. The first sequence in the modiste establishment run by Ford Sterling reveals a number of pretty models. There is some excellent trick photography showing Sterling draping his models by throwing strips of velvet, chiffon, etc., at them from a distance. Of course, they magically assume the proportions of gowns. Ben Turpin as a spectator to these scenes brings a lot of laughs. Then there is a cabaret dancing scene, an auto chase and some manipulation of a search light on dark park benches, all of which are exceedingly well handled and bring many laughs.

In the Courts

Kitty Gordon has filed particulars in the Supreme Court in her suit against World Film to recover damages because of the premature explosion of a bomb in the filming of a play in which she was starring. She alleges that the negligence of the defendant consisted in placing the bomb and the wiring to the switchboard unprotected on damp ground for two hours. She says her injuries consisted of burns on the left leg and arm and on the right side of her face, resulting in the loss of her eyebrows and eyelashes, bruises, and shock to her nervous system. Her permanent injuries consist of headaches from which she still suffers, she says. She spent $800 for medical treatment, was in bed one day, and was confined to the house eight days, she says.

A judgment in default for $1,065 has been entered in the City Court against the Cosmofoto Film Co. by George H. Callaghan. The plaintiff alleged that he was employed to sell the rights to "Dombey & Son," "Lady Windmere's Fan," "The Lyons Mail," and "Her Greatest Performance," at 10 per cent of the proceeds, and says he brought about the sale to the Classical Motion Picture Co. for $10,000. He sued for $1,000 and the case was not defended.

Carl Harbaugh, who directed the William J. Flynn secret service films for the Oliver Prod., has filed suit in the Supreme Court against the Oliver company for $3,500. He alleges he was discharged Nov. 1, although his contract was to run six weeks longer, for which he asks pay at $400 a week, and wants $1,000 profits and $100 salary due.

effective with the start of official activity by the Associated First National Pictures Inc., and the Associated First National Theaters, Inc., the two new organizations formed recently by the Circuit with a combined capital of $16,400,000, to determine their effect upon the present method of operation in Ohio, and to appoint a committee of nine exhibitors to meet with the directors and executives of the Circuit at Atlantic City this week.

The committee of nine appointed a subcommittee who came to New York for a conference on Friday of last week, following which they went to Atlantic City.

I. Lisbon of Cincinnati was named chairman of the main committee of nine. Members serving with Mr. Lisbon were Gus Sun, proprietor of the Fairbanks and two other theaters in Springfield, C. E. Renner of Youngstown, Charles K. Friedman of the Valentine, Toledo, M. B. Horowitz of the Fountain, Cleveland, William Slimm of the Marquee, Cleveland, Fred Desberg of Loew's Stillman, Cleveland, John Harris associated with Mr. Libson, and Ben. L. Herdingsfeld, attorney for Libson-Harris interests.

Under the leadership of E. M. Mandelbaum, president of the Ohio company, the state organization has grown from a small membership until today it includes every important first run theater in the state.

A unique conversion of the time of the salesmen heretofore employed by the First National Exhibitors Co. of Ohio will be made with the inauguration of the new national plan in that territory. The sub-franchise system will do away almost entirely with salesmen, with the disposal of the exhibitor in rights in each locality to specified theaters, but Mr. Mandelbaum announces that the sales staff will be retained, as salesmen to the public rather than to the exhibitors.

First National officials stated yesterday that the Ohio situation included practically every first run in the state. This, they say may be taken as an example of what is to be expected in every territory in the country.

Los Angeles—Arthur Letts, a well known merchant, has closed a lease for 99 years on his property at the southwest corner of Broadway and Seventh St. for a total of $12,500,000, the largest sum ever involved in a lease of Los Angeles property.

The theater will be of two floors, orchestra and balcony. There will be two entrances, one on Broadway and one on 7th street. There will be a roof garden.

First National Plan Elaborated Upon From $6,400,000—Elect Officers To-day

(By Long Distance Phone)

Atlantic City, N. J.—An important development yesterday in the First National convention here was the announcement that the plan of Associated First National Theaters, Inc., would involve $20,000,000 and not $6,400,000 as originally planned.

It was as a result of this large increase that some time was found necessary to smoothen out the details which would naturally accompany the consummation of a deal of such magnitude.

Election of officers did not take place yesterday as expected but it is generally thought that the officers will be named to-day. The convention in all probability will end to-day.

"Bored" Walk Talk

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Atlantic City.—What connection a romantic bridal suite can have with First National's pow-wow is puzzling the sophisticated Traymore staff. Joseph Von Herberg, owner of the First National franchise for Seattle is paying close to 100 berries per day for a set of modern parlor bed-room and bath innovations.

Lee Goldberg and A. H. Blank from Kentucky and Iowa respectively, gave the "bored" walk a severe trouncing—Nine miles in one day is a life record thus far. say they.

If First National members don't think Marshall Neilan the greatest producer since Jimmie Grainger, "produced" some remarkable "pictures," Monday!

A certain young publicity man from First National was heard to remark that his work is educational. "I've already learned a full house beats a straight," said he.

So far the wheel-chair bug hasn't bit the members. Among those who prefer walking to "African motors" are R. H. Clark, New York—E. Mandelbaum, Cleveland—J. E. Clark, Pittsburgh and Tom Moore, Washington.

"Watty" Rothacker is bemoaning only the loss of an hour's time so far. A member told him to take a salt bath and lather himself generously. "Watty" massaged a cake of soap for an hour "without even a bubble" as he expressed it.

Earl J. Hudson, who wields the facile First National publicity pen, brought his wife along and was smoking serenely when someone asked—"Who's shoeing the horse?" Earl sent the pipe back to New York insured.

Among members of the home office who "dropped" down for the "con"-vention are : W. J. Morgan, Steve W. McGrath, J. L. Hunter, George Grant. C. Lazarus, Sol S. Shernon, Paul M. Sarazan, Earl J. Hudson, Robert G. Hilton, C. H. Chandler and George R. Grant.

A rationally inclined home office scribe was taking dinner with A. M. Fabian of New Jersey. The modest-lived young man scanned the foreign languaged bill like it was a Greek newspaper. "You order," he sighed, turning over the menu. "I can eat anything you can."

"Moe" Mark of the Mark-Strands had his picture taken by George Blaisdell. He showed a wonderful overcoat back.

itonal. The present franchise will be turned over to the state organizations which will pay their pro rata share for all productions. If for instance the Asso. First National Pictures, Inc. paid $200,000 for a production and it was turned over to the Theaters the cost would be divided proportionately among the various districts an 8 per cent territory paying $25,000. In turn the cost would be proportioned among the members and the outside theaters, the franchise holders agreeing to the percentages which the various houses should pay, scaling the prices down from first run, etc. and the larger cities like New York, Chicago, Boston, St. Louis. Cleveland, being sub-divided into zones, with each zone given one house to be first, second, third run, etc., as its size and importance may determine.

May Take St. John Comedies

Some talk here of First National taking over the Al St. John Comedies made by the Warners. The first Al St. John comedy "Speed" was released by Famous. It was shown at the Capitol.

Abe Warner of the producing firm is here.

Koplar in Franchise Deal

It is reported here that a deal has been consummated with the result that Col. "Bill" Sievers has disposed of the New Grand Central Theater in St. Louis to Koplar and Goldman, who in turn also cut in on the First National franchise for St. Louis.

Gov't Again Suing General

The Government has filed a claim for $4,433.91, against the General Film in bankruptcy, claiming this to be a deficiency in the amount paid for the income tax of the company for the year 1915.

This claim is on the same basis as the one field for $11,394 for alleged deficiency in payment of income tax for 1914 as noted.

Louis Weinberger, an attorney for the trustee in bankruptcy of the General Film, has filed objections to both these claims on the ground that the items objected to by the Government, consisting of excess or additional footage charges, were deductable items, under the law. being cost of operation and leasing of films.

"Babylon" for General Release

D. W. Griffith's "The Fall of Babylon." one of the offerings in the Griffith repertory season at the Cohan Theater has been leased by D. W. Griffith Service. This feature was sent on tour with two special productions immediately following the repertory season, and played as a regular attraction in combination houses throughout the east and middle west, carrying a special orchestra and other features. Split in Northwest

Law Suit Seen as Wedge Dividing Gottstein Interests and Jensen and Von Herberg

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Seattle—The impression seems to be prevalent here that a split is considered certain between the Gottstein interests and Jensen and Von Herberg, partners in the Liberty theater.

It is reported here that J. L Gottstein, who is vice-president of the Greater Theaters Co., Inc., operating the Liberty Coliseum and Mission theaters, has allied himself with Famous Players and that he will start a chain of theaters to combat Jensen and Von Herberg.

The belief is further strengthened because of a law suit filed by Gottstein and F. V. Fisher, secretary of the company against Jensen and Von Herberg. The suit alleges that the latter acquired the property for the Liberty without the knowledge of the former and that Jensen and Von Herberg formed a company known as the Pioneer Securities Co. with dummies as trustees and bought the property on better terms than they reported to the plaintiffs. Gottstein and Fisher ask that they be allowed to buy the property on the terms the defendants secured it or that they be allowed to take lease on terms offered to them by the former owners.

Gottstein and Fisher are in the East with Jensen and Von Herberg to attend the First National convention at Atlantic City.

Za Su Pitts Signed

George H. Callaghan, New York representative of the R C. P. Smith Investment Syndicate of Los Angeles stated yesterday that his company had placed Za Su Pitts under contract. The Smith contract will become effective at the expiration of her Brentwood contract which has several months to run yet.

Sarah Mason who collaborated on several of the King Vidor-Brentwood stories will do continuities for the new series of stories.

Zukor Denies Famous Building Theaters; Says Wall St. Does Not Control Company

In Interview Calls Talk of "Breaking" Exhibitor "Cheap Stuff"—States First National Forced Company to Tie-up With Houses —Expects to Remain as President Indefinitely

Adolph Zukor, president, Famous Players-Lasky in an interview yesterday took occasion to officially deny the reports which have been current for some time past that Famous Players was building theaters and that Wall St.. capital was in control of the affairs of the corporation. Mr. Zukor also stated that the report that Famous was out to "break" the exhibitor unless he sold his house to the company was "cheap stuff."

In his talk, Zukor first explained the connection that Wall St. capital had with Famous Players.

He stated that after several years of effort he had succeeded in interesting Wall St. men in the picture business. Dominick and Dominick together with Hallgarten and Co. had underwritten a $10,000,000 issue of preferred stock. Those interests, however, cannot interfere with Famous, according to Zukor who stated:

"The whole works are in charge with Mr .Lasky in charge production. They cannot attempt t dictate the affairs of this company.'

Zukor then referred to H. D. H. Connick, who is chairman of the Finance Committee of Famous Players:

Regarding him, Zukor said, "When Kuhn, Loeb & Co. became interested in Famous Players they sent Mr. Connick up to these offices to go over the balance sheets. I asked

75 Theaters Building

By First National Members—Ince Fails to Arrive—Session Ends Tomorrow

(By Long Distance Phone)

Atlantic City, N. J.—First National members in various sections of the country have 75 theaters under construction, according to part of a statement issued by J. D. Williams, manager of the Circuit at 3.30 this morning.

The officials were in session all of last night and the meeting was terminated at 3.22 this morning. The convention will last until tomorrow night.

The discussion centered around the activities of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., only, the theater organization not getting under way until sometime during the summer.

Ince Fails to Arrive

There was considerable disappointment over the failure of Thomas H. Ince, president of the Associated Producers to arrive during the convention. Whether or not Ince's arrival here might have anticipated any deal between the First National and the new group of associated independent producers is a question, but there was an air of general disappointment over his failure to arrive, and considerable gossip. Some of this was to the effect that the First National has the strongest chance of any of the distributing companies to handle the "Announcement that Allan Dwan is to leave the Mayflower organization proved unexpected development in view of the fact that President Wolper had hardly finished assuring us that the director of 'The Luck of the Irish' was to remain with his organization. Mr. Dwan will sever his relations with Mayflower, he says, on the completion of his next production. He will at once begin work, following the making of his next picture on his first pro-

Zukor Speaks

Mr. Connick how he liked the picture business and whether he would like to join us. He is now an employee of this corporation, nothing else, and because of his knowledge of financial affairs, chairman of the finance committee."

Zukor then spoke of the entrance into the exhibiting field by Famous Players and undoubtedly referred to the First National Exhibitor's Circuit when he said:

"When the National Exhibitors met in Los Angeles last year, I at once saw that they were entering the producing field. They would go to a director who was under contract or perhaps underpaid and say to him,

"'Why don't you enter business for yourself? We will market your product.'

"If that condition were to prevail, I saw at once that we would have to arrange for a theater in all of the key cities of the country to insure showings for our product. Let me say that we are not building theaters. What we are doing is to perfect a tie-up with prominent exhibitors with a clause elastic enough to eliminate possibilities of our over-charging for our product while the exhibitor agrees to show our pictures.

"I don't mind saying in that connection that we have been remarkably successful. In my recent trip west, I had no trouble at all in convincing exhibitors of the advantages of the plan.

"It makes no difference who owns the theaters in this business. Good pictures are the soul of this business. That is why we try every day to devise means of making better pictures for we know that with a good picture an exhibitor can make money.

"I wouldn't take theaters if they were offered to me for nothing. Successful operation of a theater depends on the personal touch and cannot be operated by a corporation as the United Cigar stores are operated.

"There have been reports circulated that I have or am about to resign from Famous Players. I would no more think of leaving this place than you would of leaving your home. I plan to stay here in charge until I get old and then I hope my son will be able to take over the business."

Mr. Zukor planned going abroad the end of February, but the boat's sailing has been postponed until March 6.

Mr. Levy states instances where exhibitors have been forced to pay money to distributors for pictures and for advertising matter, supposed only to advertise the pictures, which plainly advertise some merchandise product.

The instances are parallel to those cited by R. H. Clark of First National in a statement published in WID'S DAILY, Tues., Jan. 6.

Why We Refused to Sell for One Hundred Thousand Dollars

THE day after "Empty Arms" was turned over to us by Director Frank Reicher, a well-known distributor tendered us a point-blank offer of $100,000 guarantee on the sale. This offer did not appeal to us, because we had spent over sixty thousand dollars in producing the picture and were cognizant of the fact that, in it, we have one of those master productions that strikes the industry about every three or four years. But the distributor insisted that his offer was merely a guarantee; that the amount "Empty Arms" could command, might run close to seven figures.

Then, in the course of the discussion, the head of our advertising department apologized for interrupting us, and said: "It is peculiar that you should offer $100,000 for 'Empty Arms,' for I have here in my hand my Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet, which I was just about to hand to Mr. Park."

"What is the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet?" asked the well-known distributor.

"It's nothing more than a book of printed suggestions that show the exhibitor who books 'Empty Arms' how easily he can put it over, and I consider it worth $100,000," replied our advertising manager.

At first, we must confess, we thought the A. M. had lost his reason. We knew that he had been working day and night inventing valuable promotion "stunts," but, after ten minutes of discussion, he convinced us that he was right.

At parting, the well-known distributor raised his offer to a sum that the average independent producer would sell three pictures for; but in justice to

we were forced to reject.

On the following pages, we publish a brief digest of the extraordinary history and superlative qualities of "Empty Arms," being thoroughly convinced that, among the intelligent film buyers of America, there is going to be the most spirited bidding in years. Lester Park &
Edward Whiteside
PRODUCERS

How Lester Park and Edward Whiteside produced "EMPTY ARMS"

AFTER a hundred or more stories suitable for screen production were submitted to us by the foremost authors of America, we selected the script of a young writer, Willard King Bradley, as the most original in the batch, and the most original we had seen in years. The story, dealing with the Gargantuan question of Motherhood, demanded the finest artistic talent procurable. Frank Reicher, responsible for many Paramount and Metro successes, was chosen to direct "Empty Arms," because we figured that he alone could handle a great number of its exceedingly difficult scenes, the majority of which were at once intensely dramatic and unusually delicate. Mr. Reicher immediately surrounded himself with the foremost technicians. Gail Kane, famous star of screen and stage, who had just closed in the Broadway success, "The Woman in Room 13," was signed to star; then a powerful cast, including Thurston Hall, J. Herbert Frank and other well-known screen celebrities, was engaged to support her. The picture was made; and, as we watched its progress, we believed that we had a master production. But we were not content to rest on our own judgment. We called in that famous editorial writer, Dr. Frank Crane, who contributed his unique services to the thought side of the picture.

It is the easiest thing in the world for a producer to deal in twelve-cylinder adjectives, and to megaphone it from the housetops that his picture is supreme. We are so confident of the success of "Empty Arms" that we are more than willing to simply place it in the hands of the buyers and exchange men, and let the screen do the talking. We are so certain that they will say that we have *under*estimated it, that we will stake our future success on it! Which is saying volumes.

The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet

WHEN the advertising manager entered the conference immediately after the well-known distributor made his original offer, he said:

"The idea in 'Empty Arms' is one never before touched. Its originality is worth a great deal. But the idea is of such importance at this time, that I find our picture can command over a hundred thousand dollars worth of advertising in every important city.

"How do I know? Well, I have written to newspaper editors, civic authorities, educators and men and women in public life, club officials, doctors, lawyers and other professionals. In every city, interest in the subject contained in 'Empty Arms' is so great, that, if we were to try to arouse this interest with paid advertising, it would cost over a hundred thousand dollars to do it."

The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet Tells the Whole Story; It Covers the Box-Office Possibilities of "Empty Arms" from Every Angle. A Copy of It Will Gladly be Sent Only to Those Exhibitors and States Right Buyers Who Personally Sign On Their Business Stationery a Request for It.

product of the new independent organization.

Changes of Exchange Operation

Under the new plan of operation of the First National it will not be surprising if the exchanges will change their method of operation. This is being talked of considerably in view of the fact that some of the more important key communities are expected to handle features in the first run houses on a percentage basis. This basis, if worked out and perfected, will call for the exhibitor to meet a certain guarantee, after that the producer will take a certain definite amount, and thereafter all receipts will be split on a basis of probably 50-50. If this is carried through there will be little for the exchanges to do save to physically handle the product and the branch managers will become out and out salesmen.

Directors Named for Picture Unit

The new board of directors of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc. are R. H. Lieber, H. O. Schwalbe, Nate H. Gordon, J. Von Herberg, Jacob Fabian, Moe Mark, J. B. Clark of Pittsburg, E. B. Johnson, J. H. Kunsky, J. J. Allen Col. Fred Levy. This increases the new board to eleven instead of the old number of seven.

Conspicuous in this new board is the absence of T. L. Tally of Los Angeles, Aaron Jones of Chicago, E. H. Hulsey of Texas and R. H. Clark of New York.

Neilan Film First Release

It became known yesterday that the first release of the new picture corporation will be Marshall Neilan's production "The River's End," to be released sometime in the middle of February. The new theater organization with twenty million capital will in all likelihood not become effective until sometime in the summer or early fall, the immediate program being only with reference to the picture company.

Reichenbach "Saw" Kunsky

Harry Reichenbach of Equity Pictures came down to see John Kunsky about a contract. He lingered long enough to "see" Kunsky and to allow a number of others to "see" him. And when they finished "calling" Harry departed cheerfully on his way. He says he doesn't expect to miss any First National conventions in the future. They're such a good bunch of "see'ers."

Paul Mooney, of the Anita Stewart Prod. was Harry's business partner. Mooney likes Harry just at present.

Rothacker's Dinner

Watterson Rothacker who does all the First National printing gave a little dinner party Tuesday night. Regrets from many that he didn't give more.

All of Paul Mooney's champagne gave out Sunday. And the red eye was available at spots at $40 per bottle.

Koplar's Car

Harry Koplar hired a chair Tuesday morning. "Jimmy" Grainger joined in the ride and there was a fine row when Jimmy wanted to ride one way and Koplar wanted to see the other end of the walk. They effected a compromise. They trailed Earl Gulick's car. But ask 'em why?

Wid's in Demand

WID'S DAILY arrived late in the evening and was hungrily read by the film folk who hadn't had a bit of news of their industry since Sunday. And 24 hours without news in this business means something. The other papers in the trade promised to arrive. But none came.

Mandlebaum Lucky

E. M. Mandelbaum says Atlantic City is the luckiest spot in the world. He wants all First Natl. conventions held here.

Col. Levy Missing

Everyone missed Col. Fred Levy of Louisville. But the Colonel was too busy in Chicago at the convention of the Natl. Asso. of Retail Clothiers where he will try to put through a resolution blocking the use of advertising on the part of national clothing advertisers unless the exhibitors receive benefit therefrom. Thus taking the profit from the makers of and the distributors of certain kinds of industrial advertising.

"River's End" and the Ocean

James R. "Jimmy" Grainger of the Neilan organization is here talking about "River's End" even though he is on the edge of the Atlantic. Some of the exhibitors present were wondering over his appearance until he began to tell them all about the first Neilan production. Then they began to understand.

Those in Attendance

The following were in attendance at the convention:

Jule and Jay J. Allen, Toronto; A. H. Blank, Des Moines; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; R. H. Clark, New York City; R. D. Craver, Charlotte, N. C.; W. P. Devees, Vancouver, B. C.; Jacob Fabian and A. M. May Build New Studio

As Addition to Present Metro Plant, Says Loew—Going West With Rowland and Engel

Marcus Loew, Richard A. Rowland and Joe Engel of Loew-Metro leave for California on Sunday to look over general production at the Metro studio.

Loew goes on a double mission, he explained yesterday. He wants to familiarize himself with the production end of the business and look after some pressing matters connected with the Ackerman and Harris string of theaters which he controls.

It has been persistently reported that Loew-Metro officials are leaving to go after the distribution of the Big Five-Associated Producers product but when Loew was asked regarding that he stated:

"There is nothing to that at all. I am going out to get familiar with production and look over things generally. We may build another studio, I don't know yet."

Goldwyn-Ascher

Former Reported Holding 50% of Circuit's Theaters in Chicago —No Effect on First National

Goldwyn has purchased a fifty per cent interest in the Ascher Bros chain of theaters in Chicago, according to reliable information secured yesterday. The purchase price is $900,000.

Several efforts were made last night to secure Samuel Goldwyn for a statement on the deal but all attempts were unavailing.

When Nate Ascher was asked last night at the Ritz Carlton whether the report was true, he said:

"Why don't you go to Goldwyn for your information?"

When further pressed for either a denial or confirmation, he repeated:

"I prefer you go to Goldwyn for your information."

Ascher Bros. with Balaban and Katz hold the First National franchise for Chicago.

A First National official stated over the long distance phone from Atlantic City that the reported Goldwyn deal would make absolutely no difference in the status of the First National franchise.

"Milk, Not Wine"

Is What Industry Needs—According to the American Banker

In its issue of Jan. 5, the "American Banker" says:—

"Wall Street money has always been easy picking for the promoter of motion pictures and on one or two occasions these pickings have almost put over a successful picture.

"It is only recently, however, that the 'fifth largest industry' has succeeded in corralling large capital from bankers, whose names represent standing in Wall Street.

"The latest combination of capital enlisted represents a tremendous sum to be thrown into the coffers of an industry with a thorough record for mismanagement. The moving picture producer has never suffered for funds, he has sunk one fortune only to find another one ready to go into the hole unfilled by the first. He has had huge stock issues underwritten, he has sold bonds, each representing nothing but promises and has played with funds furnished by individuals who had a personal interest in chorus girls who wanted to be starred in the film. The 'Tootsie Twoshoes Company,' the 'Nellie the Vamp Company,' and innumerable others of the same sort have blazed in myriads of lights on Broadway only to join their predecessors in oblivion because the story, production and star were refused by the public and what should have been enough money to make two good pictures was frittered away in one bad one.

"The motion picture industry is in its infancy, it has a rosy future, it numbers a few intelligent producers, some capable directors, a scant number of attractive and sincere stars and very inferior management. In other words art is present to a limited degree but business ability is sadly lacking. It is pleasant for a banker to have an interest in a flock of 'movie queens'—as a recreation—but poor business as an investment unless, with the capital supplied, these bankers also furnish the same sort of management they would demand of any industrial concern whose preferred stock they underwrote and offered to their clients as a profitable investment.

"The motion picture industry is young in years but old in experience in squandering easily acquired fortunes in tinsel, wasted footage, expensive, undesirable actresses and scenery and props and casts for stories that are unfit for presentation to intelligent audiences, which those in movie houses now are becoming. Capital should insist upon management, or else the investor will have stock certificates with the same decorative value as those of some oil companies long since forgotten by all excepting their hopeful stockhoders.

"What this moving picture infant needs is milk, not wine. Solid management backed by the sturdy capitalists recently announced should give us better pictures, better actors, more realism, less vamps and sure income on our investment."

Meeting Closing

within a brief time. At the moment, however, only the picture company affairs are being "ironed out."

It is promised that sometime next week definite statements relative to the work taken up will be announced at which time the new officials of the picture corporation as well as the new executive committee will probably be announced. The slate as predicted in WID'S DAILY will in all likelihood be carried out.

DANNENBERG.

Mayor's Committee Meets

The Committee on M. P. Regulation opened its two-day session at the Waldorf Astoria yesterday.

The committee appointed four subcommittees one to investigate the state censorship question, one on local regulation, one on the work of the National Board of Review and the fourth on existing laws relative to indecent exhibitions.

These committees will investigate in its own particular field and another meeting will be held in Albany in about a month at which a definite policy for the Committee will be adopted.

The Talmadge and Famous Players studios were visited yesterday. The conference will be continued to-day.

No Split in Northwest

J. L. Gottstein, vice-president of the Greater Theaters Co., Inc., operating the Liberty in Seattle stated yesterday that the suit between Jensen and Von Herberg and himself was merely for the purpose of ascertaining property rights on the Liberty theater. It does not indicate, said he, a break between Jensen and Von Herberg and himself as indicated in a Seattle dispatch to WID'S DAILY, published in yesterday's issue.

Manchester, Me.—Fred Richards and a Portland man are dickering over the sale of the Majestic which the former owns. The house is not yet complete but can be finished in a few weeks.

The number of admissions to motion picture theatres steadily increases and so does the consumption of RITCHEY posters. There is a very direct connection between these two facts.

First National Members Expected in Town To-day from Atlantic City

(By Long Distance Phone)

Atlantic City, N. J.—The First National convention is over.

The franchise holders and directors will leave town this morning and arrive in New York about midday. Some of the members left town yesterday.

Announcement of the plans of the Associated First Nation Pictures, Inc. are expected to be made early next week.

"Trade Review" Sold

Passes From L. F. Blumenthal to A. B. Swetland—Identified With Class Journal Publishing Co.

The Exhibitors Trade Review has passed from the control of Louis F. Blumenthal to L. W. Boynton and A. B. Swetland. The latter is known in the publishing field by virtue of his connection with persons identified wth the Class Journal Publishing Co., publishers of a considerable number of trade journals.

Mr. Blumenthal stated yesterday that he understood that the control had passed into Swetland's hands as a personal venture. However, the transfer of the publication to the holdings of the Class Journal Co. in the future would not be surprising to some. Swetland figured last year in the purchase of "The Dramatic Mirror."

Lesley Mason will continue as editor but it is understood that some of his duties as publisher will pass into the hands of Mr. Boynton who will assume active charge of the business end of the publication.

Foundation Case Argued

F. P. Foreign Business

Famous Players-Lasky yesterday showed to the trade the picture dealing with its foreign activities which was recenty exhibited at the annual directors' meeting as a part of the treasurer's report.

The film gave some interesting figures, notably that the total foreign business of the corporation during the first ten months of 1919 amounted to $4,500,000. This is 95 per cent in excess of the total foreign business done in 1919 and the 1918 figure, in turn, is 100 per cent in excess of the business done the year previous.

The picture showed views of practically every foreign office controlled by Famous Players-Lasky, including the branches in various English cities, Paris, Copenhagen, and cities of South America, as well as many of the foreign theaters which regularly show Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

WARNING

The picture called "Tiger Girl," recently advertised as a D. W. Griffith production, was not directed by Mr. Griffith, but by Paul Powell, and it is an injustice to Mr. Powell as well as to Mr. Griffith, to call it a Griffith picture.

As a matter of record, the picture called "Tiger Girl" is an old print formerly entitled "The Lily and the Rose" and is now being resurrected presumably for the purpose of trading on Mr. Griffith's name.

"TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY:

"All genuine Griffith productions carry the initials D. G. and the written name GRIFFITH on the main title and on all important subtitles, and any motion picture offered without these trade marks not only is unauthentic, but is being foisted on the exhibitors and the public in an effort to give the public the impression that it was personally directed.

"In justice to all concerned I hereby ask all exhibitors, for the protection of themselves and their patrons, not to advertise any picture as a Griffith production unless it carries the above trade marks stamped in the film."

(Signed)

D. W. Griffith

Any picture not stamped with the name GRIFFITH is not a Griffith Production, and if advertised as a Griffith Production a denial signed by Mr. Griffith will be published in all territories where it is shown.

without a fight, it will leave the film world in a very deplorable state, and it will be a very dangerous precedent to set for directors and players of the industry, if this disregard of their legal agreement s allowed to go unchallenged.

"In fighting this case, I feel that I am fighting for all honest producers. It will be the means of safeguarding their interests in the future. Producers will then know that the success that any of them build up for their stars at a great expense to themselves, is not a thing which can be transferred to another man's control at the mere whim of the star or director."

Ghastly Panorama of Starving European Countries

F. B. Warren and G. B. Baker present
"STARVATION"
State Rights

DIRECTOR ..... George Z. Zimmer
AUTHOR ..... War
CAMERAMEN .....Eight official photographers
AS A WHOLE.....Ghastly panorama of starving European countries.
STORY.....The most tragic ever told; will touch everyone's heart.
DIRECTION.....Zimmer has obtained remarkable views of European ports and interior cities in the grip of starvation.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Acceptable
LIGHTING.....Sufficient to show off all of the sad details.
CAMERAWORK.....Photographers have obtained exclusive and utterly astonishing pictures.
STAR ..... Hunger
SUPPORT ..... The populace of Europe
EXTERIORS.....Taken in various of the big cities of Europe and show points of great interest besides the scenes that drive home Europe's condition.
DETAIL.....First a subtitle then a scene is the order of the picture; there are surely as many inserts as there are scenes.
CHARACTER OF PICTURE.....Will certainly waken people to Europe's plight in no uncertain terms.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,500 feet

The terrible conditions existing in various European countries but principally Russia, Austria, Poland and Germany, which Herbert Hoover and the American Relief Administration are in some way alleviating today are set forth in all their ghastliness in "Starvation," a seven-reel feature the scenes of which were taken under the direction of George F. Zimmer, Mr. Hoover's aid, and approved by him and government officials.

The picture may be set down as the greatest tragedy that ever reached the screen for it throws a pitiless light on conditions today in Europe, conditions resulting from war's devastation and its sapping at a people's vitals, and made worse by the political and social upheavals that have continued since the great war came to a close.

In these days of great changes it is futile to pull wool over the eyes and attempt to go through life thinking everything is just perfect because the autocrat of Germany has been unseated. And so such a picture as "Starvation" will serve the world in opening the eyes of the many superficially inclined folk in this country who believed that fighting stopped with the signing of the armistice.

And it drives home its argument and its message in a series of terrifically tragic views. Far worse than the ghastly scenes of the execution of men are those which show young children, hopelessly emaciated, under-nourished, their eyes sunken, their expressions ever breaking between an insane man's grin and a desire to cry. Children with their limbs twisted, unable to stand, so steadily starved from birth that they have lost the shape of human beings.

Bolshevists are shown facing firing squads. No preliminaries, the triggers are pulled and the rows of revolutionists topple quickly into ready prepared graves. There are hangings, too. The marked men are obliged to arrange the nooses about their own necks and swing off into the air as if they were going on a holiday.

The whole rotten condition of Europe is blamed on the Bolshevists in "Starvation." In fact the blame is placed so often that the picture takes the semblance of anti-Bolshevist propaganda as well as a lesson in modern European history.

There are many scenes showing endless bread-lines, American ships unloading at strange and interesting ports and hungry hordes awaiting the distribution of the contents of their holds. Of subtitles there are undoubtedly too many. As the picture stands now there is one to each scene. Some amount of elision is suggested.

This Won't Entertain But It Will Wake Up a Lot of People

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Starvation" is remotely removed from anything approaching pleasant entertainment. It is a series of scenes, each one a tragedy. That it will do a tremendous good in showing people the true condition of affairs in Europe is a foregone conclusion. And because of this the exhibitor will be doing a duty to his community in showing it—or parts of it.

However, the exhibitor wants to give his people entertainment. It would be a good idea to insert the more dominant scenes of this on a regular bill and feature them in the advertising along with the entertainment part of the bill. The message would be spread just as forcefully then. The picture as it stands now is too long except for special showings.

Enid Bennett in
"THE WOMAN IN THE SUITCASE"
Thos. H. Ince Prod.—Paramount Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... Fred Niblo
AUTHOR .....C. Gardner Sullivan
SCENARIO BY .....C. Gardner Sullivan
CAMERAMAN ..... George Barnes
AS A WHOLE.....Old time situation lacks conviction and seldom reaches the entertainment point.
DIRECTION..Registered a few laughs and handled players very well in most instances but couldn't make up for the impossible story.
STORY.....Been done hundreds of times and isn't different enough to get by on that score.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fairly good
LIGHTINGS .....A bit hazy at times
CAMERA WORK....Interior shots frequently too deep.
STAR.....Satisfactory for the most part but registered some strange emotions in close-ups.
SUPPORT .....Roland Lee very pleasing as the proxy sweetheart; William Conklin fails to impress.
EXTERIORS ..... Seldom necessary
INTERIORS.....Lavish and looked like the real thing.
DETAIL.....Some titles that got snickers instead of laughs.
CHARACTER OF STORY....Daughter sets out to save father who is straying from the straight and narrow.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,410 feet

With the exception of a very few moments at long intervals which contain slight entertainment value, "The Woman in the Suitcase" falls slightly below the border line of the average program offering. The story has been given adequate production and the players for the most part are well adapted to their parts, but the idea is so ancient and actually so implausible that the better efforts hardly hold it up.

Just for the sake of argument, if nothing more, what young girl would think up such an extraordinary way of "saving" her father and wondering further, how would such a scheme meet with such splendid and "just as planned" success. There are numerous incidents that just happen without the slightest foundation and even some explaining by way of titles doesn't seem to convince.

Roland Lee does a lot of unusual things and humbles himself greatly for the sake of adventure while Dorcas Matthews is a "wery wicked wamp" who must have cost the producer quite a bit for her supply of cigarettes.

Enid Bennett is the young girl just graduated from college who comes across Dolly's (Miss Matthews') photo in her daddy's grip while looking for a present which he has bought for her. Realizing that "The Woman in the Suitcase" must be the cause of her father's recent "business at the office" evenings, Enid plans to save him from disgrace without letting her mother know anything about the adventure.

Shero advertises for a gentleman to act as escort and it happens that Roland Lee, a wealthy young man, answers the ad in the spirit of adventure. Enid gives him strictly to understand that he is being employed by her and insists that he allow her to pay the bills at the various cafes they visit in shero's search for "The Woman in the Suitcase."

When finally they come upon the "wamp," Enid is agreeably surprised to see that her escort knows the famous woman and immediately asks for an introduction which he reluctantly assents to give her. According to her plan, shero becomes very friendly with Dolly. The climax comes when the father comes to Dolly's apartment and finds his daughter evidently much intoxicated but this is only a part of her scheme and in the end hero Lee gives Dolly some hush money, father goes back to his wife and shero falls in love with Lee.

Will Satisfy But Won't Stand Any Extraordinary Boosting

There is no great reason why you shouldn't play "The Woman in the Suitcase" and get away with it. Even though the story is implausible and at times a trifle ridiculous, director Niblo has worked in a few good bits. Miss Bennett plays her part with sincerity and except for once or twice when she was poorly lighted, photographed very well. Dorcas Matthews is very well cast as the home-wrecker and Roland Lee is a patient and pleasing hero. Taken all in all Miss Bennett is supported by a capable company.

The title is a good one and suggests numerous exploitation and advertising ideas. Catchlines might read: "Who is 'The Woman in the Suitcase'? Come to the blank theater and see how Enid Bennett solves the mystery." Or, "What would you do if you found a woman's photograph in your father's suitcase? See what Enid Bennett does in her latest production at the blank theater."

Author's Dramatic Idea Is Quite Spoiled by Scenario and Direction

Lucy Cotton in
"BLIND LOVE"
Gerald Bacon—Aywon—State Rights

DIRECTOR.....Oliver D. Bailey
AUTHOR.....Max Marcin
SCENARIO BY.....Basil Dickey
CAMERAMAN .....Edward Earl
AS A WHOLE.....Very fine dramatic idea marred by ill-treatment in scenario; climax shows big league situation but is not sympathetically developed.
STORY.....Essential twists expertly contrived and climax reveals a big dramatic idea but poor handling has deprived it of full entertaining power.
DIRECTION.....Shows real effort but for most part is stagey and forces players to play to camera in obvious fashion.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Good
LIGHTINGS.....Some good but others just as bad in regard to lights and shadows.
CAMERA WORK.....Poor
STAR.....Registers fairly well through youth, beauty and ability although her work in later features has shown to better advantage.
SUPPORT.....Well selected but not well directed
EXTERIORS.....Beautiful garden shots
INTERIORS.....Fail to create the proper high class atmosphere.
DETAIL.....Le Guere's makeup varies in different scenes and gives him appearance of chameleon.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Mercenary villain attempts to ruin young man's marriage to rich girl.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,300 feet

On reading all those big names of the men concerned in the production of "Blind Love" one might arrive at the conclusion that the picture was something out of the ordinary in the way of entertainment. Such, however, is not the case unless out of the ordinary be interpreted to mean below the average feature standard.

Mr. Marcin's idea for "Blind Love" was curiously different and doubtless emanated a dramatic strength in its original synopsis form. It builded to a particularly striking climax, a climax which one can well imagine holding an audience breathless on the speaking stage or, again, on the screen if it were handled in a sympathetic manner.

However, the other celebrities connected with the production, namely Basil Dickey and Oliver Bailey have generally failed in realizing on the dramatic worth of the material handed them by the author. The scenario writer has botched the work almost completely so what might have been an intensely interesting story culminating in a denouement of real force, turns out to be an artificially motivated, uneven story concluding in a climax that only reveals its full possibilties to one trained to take even the bad pictures seriously—and which will hardly reveal anything satisfactory to the person in search of entertainment.

The story relates of Beard's love for Josephine Burden, an heiress, who is overjoyed particularly as she realize he is unaware of her wealth. They marry. Previously George Collins had received Beard's signature, when the latter was intoxicated, to a paper purporting to be an ordinary I. O. U. but which was a statement to the effect that he (Beard) would pay Collins a sum of money in reward for his introduction to Josephine if he ever succeeded in marrying her.

When Josephine learns of this she is utterly disconsolate. The story then concentrates on another love affair of an aged pair and through the tragedy which concludes this Josephine and Beard are brought to a real understanding of each other—the false note is explained.

Lucy Cotton creates a favorable impression as Josephine while George Le Guere, Thurlow Bergen, Morgan Coman, Charles Butler, Lillian Bacon and Edouarde Durand play other important roles.

People Have Been Educated to Better Pictures Than This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Practically every picture audience in the country has been educated to expect better things than "Blind Love." And it seems a pity to condemn it when all the sincere effort expended on it is considered. However, "Blind Love" is way below the standards set by the average offering of the day. Exhibitors who have built up any sort of a patronage through selecting their pictures from the best the market has to offer, will find that it fails to rank in the 1, 2, 3 class.

If it has to be played, feature the name of Max Marcin and mention the fact that he was one of the authors of "Cheating Cheaters" and also give Lucy Cotton a play for all things indicate to the rapid rise in popularity of this young actress.

Real Showmen - and Why

There is valuable information for every exhibitor in the country on "How to Be Successful Though an Exhibitor" in a review of the methods that have enabled N. H. Gordon, of Boston, to achieve his present status.

Twelve years ago Gordon owned and managed one small house. It required approximately four years for him to obtain a substantial start toward success. During that time he carefully formed the policies and methods upon which he bases all of his achievements.

Today he is the executive head of a circuit of more than 60 first-class theaters. He is a financial power; a bank director; owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise, and the exhibitor who took a special feature attraction, while it was being played for maximums of one and two weeks in other big cities, and put it on in Boston for twenty consecutive weeks at prices which topped $1.50 a seat.

The business acumen which actuated Mr. Gordon in this accomplishment which has shattered all precedents for duration of runs and admission prices, is the one that is the underlying motive in everything he does as an exhibitor.

It amounts to an unshakable confidence in motion pictures.

Gordon began his career as an exhibitor on the proverbial "shoe string" for finances. In that respect he was not unlike a dozen or five thousand other motion picture exhibitors of twelve years ago. But it is the things Gordon has done since then that comprise a guide to growth, prosperity and community importance for other exhibitors who have the ambition and possibly lack the secret of the way to realize it.

"How did you do it?" he was asked. And Gordon replied:

"First, by realizing early in my experiences as a theater owner, with one small house, that I would need assistance to enable me to realize my ambition for a big circuit in New England. To build up my interests with nothing but the profits from one theater would have been a long, tedious process. I felt that some other exhibitor might not feel the hesitancy I had about a partnership with capital, which would mean a division of profits. So I overcame one word—my hesitancy.

"It seemed to me that the folks who had surplus money, made in other industries, and who might become interested in motion picture theaters, would be more agreeably disposed if they were personally acquainted with the man who submitted a proposition to them. It has seemed perfectly natural to me always to associate with influential men. I cultivated their acquaintance. I always replied truthfully to questions about my business. I never hesitated in my confidence in the business. I was building for the future during the early years, and my chief asset was a fast growing personal friendship with worth-while business people.

"Four years after I opened my small house I found my big opportunity to enter Boston as an exhibitor. From that time on it has been chiefly a problem in restraining ambition so that it did not get out of step with resources available for development and extension work.

"I think that every exhibitor, no matter where he is located, or how big or small his theater holdings may be, should consider himself an integral part of his community, just as important as the clothiers, bankers or merchants in any line. He should have a genuine pride in his business. Membership in local civic bodies, commercial clubs and even representative private clubs and associations, is a valuable point of contact with municipal affairs, and it gives an exhibitor position, socially and commercially. Then, when he wants assistance, in any form, to build a new and larger house, or to extend his holdings into other communities in the territory, he has a great asset in his local acquaintance."

One important feature of Gordon's policy for the operation of his theaters is his refusal to recognize precedents or what the other fellow does. He is a convert to pioneering. Here enters the most recent example. Gordon has given the industry of his refusal to consider the facts of what has been done as having any bearing on what can be done. By his willingness to cut away from things conventional, he has made money on productions long after exhibitors in other territories have ceased to run them.

When First National released Mary Pickford's "Daddy Long Legs," Gordon decided that the industry had gone beyond the point of one and two weeks' stands as the maximum. By the use of showmanship he proved his theory to be a fact. More important still, he demonstrated that exhibitors can charge prices that are almost the equivalent of those for legitimate road shows.

For twenty consecutive weeks he presented "Daddy Long Legs" in Boston at $1.50 top admission. And during the five months' of its run he did not have a week when the net profits were more than twenty per cent. below those of the opening week.

His combination of a supreme confidence in the business, which enables him to impress his business associates and acquaintances with its stability and soundness, with his determination not to consider any achievement the limit of possibilities for the screen, has enabled him to forge ahead by leaps and bounds.

"No one can correctly state the ultimate in motion pictures," he declares. "I feel today almost as I did twelve years ago, that the future for exhibitors is just as great and equally as promising as ever. The great essential is for an exhibitor to consider his theater or theaters as a business enterprise, worthy of the best that is in him, and sorely needing a thorough mastery of the details of showmanship to make them profitable and enduring."

They Dressed This Up Lavishly Enough But Forgot a Story

Elaine Hammerstein in "GREATER THAN FAME"
Selznick—Select

DIRECTOR.....Alan Crosland
AUTHOR.....S. Jay Kaufman
SCENARIO BY.....Katherine Reed
CAMERAMAN.....Jules Cronjager
AS A WHOLE.....Very adequate production given to totally inadequate story idea.
STORY.....Always preaching that love is greater than fame and preaches so much the plot never makes any headway.
DIRECTION.....Very lavish and high class
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Very good
LIGHTINGS .....Realistic
CAMERA WORK.....Highly commendable
STAR.....Appeals and seems thoroughly able to handle what little work is given her.
SUPPORT .....Excellent
EXTERIORS.....Include a number of different views of New York City and pretty suburban shots.
INTERIORS.....All rich and lavish
DETAIL.....Some anacronisms in inserts and time; director shows big comfortable setting for which girl pays $10.00 a week and meagre setting for which villain pays $300.00 a month
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Girl learns that love is greater than fame.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

Barring a few directorial slips which fail to make very big dents in a careful and lavish production, "Greater Than Fame" may be set down as a richly embellished picture, with a capable star and a highly competent supporting cast but without anywhere near enough substance to entertainingly fill out its footage.

The story is terribly weak and the main points that stand out in it are its subtitles which are forever preaching about love and fame and ambition. In fact they serve very forcefully to give the impression that the author of "Greater Than Fame" had a "message" to get over to the public, to wit that love is greater than all fame, and that, furthermore, he didn't have a plot to write into his message.

Elaine Hammerstein assumes the role of Margaret Brooks, a New England girl who comes to New York to cultivate her singing voice. She doesn't get along very well on account of lack of funds. Her teacher introduces her to Mrs. Waring, a wealthy patron of struggling artists who promises assistance. In truth she takes Margaret into her home and supplies her with plenty of gowns and a life of leisure.

Then Margaret wakes up to the fact that she isn't getting anywhere and decides to try it alone again. This time she falls foul of Mr. Waring who attempts to get her in his power. Margaret's true friend, John Martin, sees them together and misconstrues the entire situation. He returns to his home and suffers a nervous breakdown. Margaret visits an opera impressario who also makes a nasty proposition to her and then reforms when she reproaches him. Then she returns to Martin, explains matters and they marry and the last scene shows her making her operatic debut in an opus by her husband which is presented by the self-same impressario.

All of which is nowhere near substantial enough for a feature story and this despite the very good work of the star and her notable supporting cast which includes such skilled players as Walter McGrail, Albert Roccardi, Wiliam H. Tooker, Julia Swayne Gordon, Arthur Donaldson and Cora Williams.

This Doesn't Give Sufficient Satisfaction

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This certainly doesn't measure up to the type of entertainment that one is led to hope for from the Selznick studios. And its shortcomings, first and last, may be chalked up to the lack of dramatic story material. You can endow a picture with the most lavish production in the world, contribute to it the best photography and lighting effects and secure the services of a competent star and supporting cast but when all is said and done these amount to nothing if the story fails to deliver the goods.

That's just the trouble here. Of course Selznick has advertised his product largely and there may be an already created public waiting to see "Greater Than Fame" as soon as you show the title and the name of the star over your theater but most people are going to come out pretty much disappointed after sitting through the feature. Its lack of meaty material and the obvious padding that it contains tire the spectator and while it has some human interest moments and some interesting and pretty shots it can not be ranked as a first class feature because of the lack of real honest-to-goodness story material.

Holds Well Throughout and Gets Over Its Point With Decision

Alice Joyce in
"SLAVES OF PRIDE"
Vitagraph

DIRECTOR .....George Terwilliger
AUTHOR ..... Not credited
SCENARIO BY.....William B. Courtney
CAMERAMAN....Joe Shelderfer and Charles Davis
AS A WHOLE.....Especially fine acting is a big feature of Miss Joyce's latest; generally splendid production.
STORY.....Goes to quite a degree of exaggeration to show the depth of pride but gets over the lesson effectively.
DIRECTION.....Allowed a few incongruities but registered the author's intention in a practical way.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Very good
LIGHTINGS .....Always clear
CAMERA WORK..... Creditable
STAR.....Dignified and sincere; her usual pleasing self.
SUPPORT.....Percy Marmont and G. V. Seyffertitz have equally forceful parts and make striking impressions.
EXTERIORS.....Beautiful country estate
INTERIORS .....Quite suitable
DETAIL.....One or two bad bits but nothing extremely noticeable.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Fully implied by the title.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,362 feet

About the biggest features of Miss Joyce's latest Vitagraph production, "Slaves of Pride," are the unusually well selected cast and peculiar suitability of the story to the star's personality. Miss Joyce supplies a very fine and a truly finished performance, retaining her accustomed poise and dignity throughout the picture.

A share of the credit for the success of the production goes to Mr. Marmont and Mr. Seyffertitz, both of whom render strikingly forceful portrayals, Mr. Marmont playing the part of the austere 'slave of pride' and Mr. Seyffertitz as his secretary.

The director has handled the story material very well and worked up to the various high spot in an efficacious manner. Some audiences may take exception to a rather unnecessary bit where the best friend of the bankrupt millionaire hands him a revolver as a means of deliverance from his trouble. The entire idea is mainly for the purpose of having the wife save her husband at the fatal moment but it seems there should be some other way of having the idea present itself to the husband.

Miss Joyce has been reared in luxury but at the time the picture opens her mother is anxious to secure a wealthy husband for her daughter now that they are reduced in circumstances. Her ambitions are realized when Alice marries Brewster Howard (Percy Marmont), a wealthy and powerful figure in financial circles but a 'slave of pride.'

Shero Alice, contrary to gossip, is truly in love with her husband but it isn't long before his pride, which assumes a domineering attitude toward everyone including his wife, begins to freeze the loyalty and devotion of the wife who determines to humiliate Howard by pretending to elope with his secretary.

Howard follows the pair but when he arrives at the hotel where they are registered, the secretary has escaped after an unsuccessful attempt to force his attentions on Alice. Howard gives chase, finally cornering his victim at a railroad station. The secretary backs out a door and onto a track where he is killed by an approaching train.

The action jumps to the offices of Howard where a meeting is in progress which discloses that the former secretary had been systematically ruining his employer for years and he is now a bankrupt. Alice returns to her home in time to save her husband from killing himself.

Use the Name of the Star Extensively and Promise Them Something Good

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Admirers of Miss Joyce who follow up her work on the screen, will be particularly pleased with her performance in "Slaves of Pride." The star is admirably adapted to the part and throughout the entire picture is her usual charming self. Her's is a real personality, one that makes no small impression. Be sure to tell your women patrons that she wears some very gorgeous gowns and wraps as the wife of the millionaire.

Make a point of the story. Play up the title of the picture and say something about the results of too great a pride. You can safely promise them some very good acting on the part of Miss Joyce's supporting company, mentioning the names of Mr. Marmont and Mr. Seyffertitz.

ANOTHER GREAT SPECIAL PRODUCTION

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: "Wonderful" is the word that accurately describes this screenization of Emerson Hough's great story "The Sagebrusher." A photoplay masterpiece demands many essentials and Benjamin B. Hampton's picture qualifies in every respect. First it has an appealing story and a notable cast.... Box-office angle: Metropolitan, big puller and tremendously pleasing; Elite, strong puller and exceptionally pleasing; Family, big puller and wonderfully pleasing; Workers, strong puller and tremendously pleasing.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Benjamin B. Hampton's newest Great Authors' special, Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher" is the story of a rough diamond with a big heart. It will please the great majority of screen patrons. Replete with dramatic intensity with much of the spectacular and melodramatic elements.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: Benjamin B Hampton's big new production "The Sagebrusher" brings another powerful author to the screen in the person of Emerson Hough. This picture has a following booked in advance on the author's popularity.

WID'S DAILY: In his story of love and faith Emerson Hough has the truly human touch containing all of the emotions expected in such a fine theme. There are enough thrills to flavor and they will keep the interest sustained. Be sure and tell your audience this is the first Emerson Hough novel ever screened.

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH: "The Sagebrusher" is highly commendable and worth seeing from every angle. It combines story, director and players in a strong attraction; a worthy successor to "The Westerners" and "Desert Gold."

Russell Stars in Effective Melodrama

William Russell in
"THE VALLEY OF TO-MORROW"
American—Pathe

DIRECTOR .....Emmett J. Flynn
AUTHOR.....Stephen Fox
SCENARIO BY.....Stephen Fox
CAMERAMAN.....George Rizard
AS A WHOLE.....Strong mountain drama which is thrilling and will hold audience in suspense; possesses healthy outdoor atmosphere.
STORY.....Melodrama which affords star splendid opportunity to please film fans.
DIRECTION.....Brought out the big moments in fine fashion; has slight anti-climax.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally good
LIGHTINGS.....Up to the standard with some splendid effects near camp-fire.
CAMERA WORK.....Commendable
STAR.....Exceptionally good; displays powerful personality.
SUPPORT.....Acceptable; Frank Brownlee fine as villain and Mary Thurman reasonably good in feminine lead.
EXTERIORS.....Pleasing to the eye at all times
INTERIORS.....Few but satisfactory
DETAIL.....Most of it good, there being several fine touches; spectacle of dying man writing accusation of villain in blood on newspaper rather ghastly; a superfluity of closeups.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Hero is called upon to avenge sister whose death was indirectly caused by the man who saved his life.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

Pleasing in atmosphere and possessing the element of suspense, caused by placing the star in a rather unusual position, this will probably prove a worthwhile offering. William Russell in the stellar role gives an excellent performance and the production generally measures up to high standard. It has romance, cleverly interwoven with thrills and incidents in such a manner, that it will prove pleasing to the fan audience.

After the big punch in the offering, there is what is more or less an anti-climax, but that can be overlooked. There are many touches that will prove effective, the bits with the kitten and some others being especially pleasing. Some manner should have been devised, in which the portion where the dying man writing the name of his murderer in blood on an old newspaper hanging by his side, might have been made less gruesome, however, for that is one part that is certainly not pleasing.

George Rizard who did the camera work, and is credited with arranging the lighting effects, did good work, securing some splendid outdoor shots and several pleasing effects.

While Dabney Morgan reposes in jail for violating the liquor distilling law, he receives word of the fact that his sister has been deceived by a cosmopolitan chap, who has brought her into such a frame of mind that she jumped off a cliff. He manages to get out but on his journey, is caught in a quicksand and saved by the man he is trailing. Subsequently, he is confronted with the problem of living up to the traditions of his clan, and killing the man who has saved him from an unhappy finish, or letting the scoundrel live. He solves it by giving the fellow what is considered a fair chance, that is, permits him to dash off a certain distance and then takes a shot at him. Russell wounds him severely, but does not kill him. Subsequently, he is forced at the point of a revolver by the wounded man's sister, to bring him indoors. Fang Morgan, the villain has a hand in the proceeding, and almost queers Russell with the girl, whom he is rapidly learning to love, but it's all fixed in the end, when Fang is shot, and Russell goes as far as to promise not to make any more moonshine whiskey.

You Should Be Able to Find Room for This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have found that your crowd takes a liking to William Russell's productions, you will be perfectly safe in booking this for Russell will make a hit in it. Your crowd may like outdoor dramas, and if it does, then again, you have a reason for signing to play this. Most probably, it will please your audience, no matter what sort of a crowd it is.

Play up William Russell's name if you decide to present this. He gives a splendid exhibition in the production and they won't go away disappointed. Promise them a virile drama with plenty of action and love interest, a wicked villain and a good hero.

You won't go wrong if you decide to go in for some exploitation on this, and it certainly will afford you an opportunity to pull some stunts. Play up the problem in which Russell is placed when he has to kill the man who saved his life. That idea should provide you with some catchy catch-lines.

WARNING

The entire Motion Picture Industry is hereby warned of an attempt by the distributing agencies to offer a series of productions as being the works of David Wark Griffith.

For the protection of all — AND ESPECIALLY EXHIBITORS — and that they may not be misled by these offerings, Mr. Griffith has issued the following statement:

"TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY:

"All genuine Griffith productions carry the initials D. "In justice to all concerned I hereby ask all exhibitors, for the protection of themselves and their patrons, not to advertise any picture as a Griffith production unless it carries the above trade marks stamped in the film." (Signed)

NOTE The picture called "Tiger Girl," recently advertised as a Griffith production, was not directed by Mr. Griffith, but by Paul Powell, and it is an injustice to Mr. Powell as well as to Mr. Griffith to call it a Griffith picture. As a matter of record, the picture is an old print formerly called "The Lily and the Rose" and is now being resurrected presumably for the purpose of trading on Mr. Griffith's name.

They Meant to Make a Thriller But They Turned Out a Pretty Good Comedy

Tom Mix in
"THE CYCLONE"
Fox

DIRECTOR ..... Cliff Smith
AUTHOR ..... Col. Todhunter Marigold
SCENARIO BY .....J. Anthony Roach
CAMERAMAN ..... Frank Goode
AS A WHOLE.....Rapid-action western stuff with thrills that will get the same sort of laughs as those in the Sunshine comedies.
STORY.....The old familiar plot of the Northwest Mounted Policeman hero persuing his man and eventually getting him.
DIRECTION.....Has speeded up the action to a fine pace but has failed to make the thrills at all real—maybe Smith wasn't trying to.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Average
LIGHTINGS ..... Commonplace
CAMERAWORK.....One particularly interesting shot of house with its "side" removed.
EXTERIORS ..... Good western stuff
INTERIORS ..... Acceptable
DETAIL....No kicks on it considering general character of the production.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Hero runs Chinese border smugglers to the ground.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

They evidently set out to make another thriller in "The Cyclone," a picture that would be in line with Tom Mix's previous productions. But they went astray, particularly on the thrills, these scenes of physical sensationalism taking on the ridiculously impossible aspect of those seen in Mr. Fox's own Sunshine comedies. For instance, take the scene where the gallant hero is going across a street from one roof to another by means of a rope. Villains cut it and he swings down through a window, landing on a bed where reposes a woman. Hampton Del Ruth please write.

Another one that for sheer improbability rivals even the wildest slapstick trick is the climax scene where hero rides his horse up to the roof of a gambling and opium joint and then crashes through its three stories to the basement below, still remaining in the saddle. The funny part about this is that the horse is just as good as new when it's all over. No beast but a stallion made of iron could stand that drop and still count no broken legs when the trick was over.

However, what with the rapid-action combined with these stunts they have succeeded after all in turning out a pretty good comedy-melodrama. Folks are going to laugh at the thrills good-naturedly and the story itself succeeds in stimulating a mild degree of interest.

Hero is Sergeant Tim of that familiar picture band, the Northwest Mounted Police. He is assigned to trail down a band that is engaged in smuggling Chinamen across into the United States. At the ranch owned by the father of the girl he loves he discovers the villain in the person of the foreman. He succeeds in capturing most of the smugglers but the villain escapes and goes after the girl. Tim pursues but gets the worst of it from the villain who almost kicks the life out of him, then making off with the girl to Vancouver's Chinatown. Tim again pursues him there and then follows the rescue effected by the marvelous drop from room to basement. An interesting cross section of the gambling house is disclosed by removing the front of the building.

Mix goes through all the thrills calmly and manages to get away with what little acting awarded him pretty successfully. Coleen Moore is his leading lady while Henry Herbert and William Ellingford are others in the cast.

Star's Admirers Will Probably Count This as Good Entertainment

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

While the thrills in "The Cyclone" are far more improbable than those in the average western picture, Tom Mix's admirers will probably accept them in good fun and count the picture as good entertainment. There are times when the more improbable the thrill, the more applause it brings from a sympathetic audience. Exhibitors who have seen some of the Fairbanks' improbabilities are in a position to realize this.

As a consequence the followers of this star are quite likely to accept this picture in the same way, good-naturedly. At the same time the action throughout is keyed at a good, fast clip and the plot, slight as it is, is never allowed to lag in the least bit.

All things considered, "The Cyclone" should provide most satisfactory entertainment to your Mix fans and will get over fairly well before not too particular audiences that are not as familiar with the star.

A Production Beautiful to Look at But Lacks Sympathy in Its Dramatic Action

Nazimova in
"STRONGER THAN DEATH"
Metro

DIRECTOR.....Herbert Blache and Charles Bryant
SUPERVISED BY.....Maxwell Karger
AUTHOR.....I. A. E. Wylie
SCENARIO BY.....Charles Bryant
CAMERAMAN.....R. J. Bergquist
AS A WHOLE.....Lavish production with sumptuous scenes and settings; spectacle atmosphere dominant feature.
STORY.....Doesn't give the star her happiest environment but she handles the part in her usual capable manner.
DIRECTION.....Highly commendable for the most part; gave the star every opportunity.
PHOTOGRAPHY..... Splendid; some beautiful effects.
LIGHTINGS ..... Artistic
CAMERA WORK.....Very good
STAR.....Maintains her distinct individuality; doesn't reach the dramatic heights of some earlier vehicles.
SUPPORT..Charles Bryant pleasing in the male lead Herbert Prior gives a splendid character portrayal.
EXTERIORS.....Appropriate backgrounds; very real.
INTERIORS.....Entirely suited
DETAIL.... ..Wasted too much footage getting started.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Famous dancer broken down in health in search of a rich husband.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 7,000 feet

Madam Nazimova's producers are seemingly finding it difficult to get material especially well suited to the actress. Her latest vehicle, "Stronger than Death" does not give her the opportunity to display her distinct dramatic ability. True the story has its dramatic moments but they are short-lived and lack the sympathy that the star's personality requires.

"Stronger Than Death" is not without its implausibilities. It would seem that the author has a rather strange conception of a place to send his heroine in search of a rich husband but be that as it may he establishes her in a colony in India where her fame as a dancer gains for her the admiration and patronage of the whites in the settlement.

In this colony there is one known as James Barclay but openly avoided by society because he is a half-breed. He is immensely wealthy, however, and knowing the reason for the dancer's presence, he gallantly offers her his wealth along with himself but is repulsed.

Commander of the local British garrison is Col. Boucicault and his son, played by Mr. Bryant, known as the Hermit Doctor of Gava, for his sacrificing attendance among the cholera patients. The dancer falls in love with him and while in his hut discovers her own photo which brings forth the confession that he has been secretly in love with her since he had seen her dance in England sometime previous.

It happens that Barclay sees the doctor strike his father and in order to have the half-caste keep silent and save her lover from court martial, the dancer marries Barclay, but "in name only."

Lack of space forbids going into the remainder of the story in detail but it should suffice to say that the lovers are united in the end after another story regarding the sacred dancer of the Temple of Vishnu is unfolded and Barclay's identity is established.

Star and Splendor of Settings Will Get It Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The more recent productions which Metro has released starring Nazimova have been more or less along spectacular lines and "Stronger than Death" is another such picture. The main story deals with the dancer's search for a rich husband when her health fails her and she is no longer able to continue her work, but of practically equal importance is the story of the bride of Vishnu, the sacred dancer of the temple who had been seduced many years previous by a British Army officer.

It is in connection with these latter sequences that most of the lavishness and artistic effects are used. "Stronger Than Death" will probably please admirers of the star but there will be a vast majority of them who would welcome something less fanciful, something that will give Nazimova a better chance to display her dramatic ability, along the lines of "Out of the Fog."

Starts Off With a Bang But Peters Out Toward End

H. B. Warner in
"HAUNTING SHADOWS"
Hampton—Robertson—Cole

DIRECTOR.....Henry King
AUTHOR.....Meredith Nicholson
SCENARIO BY.....Eugene B. Lewis from "House of a Thousand Candles."
CAMERAMAN.....Victor Milner
AS A WHOLE.....Doesn't satisfy as it should owing to enormous amount of footage awarded to star alone.
STORY..Deep mystery story with numerous touches that starts off well but grows tiresome toward end as no new complications appear.
DIRECTION.....Should have compressed the action further and forgotten Warner once in a while.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Excellent
LIGHTINGS.....All very good; some fine effects
CAMERA WORK.....Very effective
STAR.....Creates fine impression at first but film gives entirely too much of him.
SUPPORT ..... Capable
EXTERIORS .....Highly appropriate
INTERIORS.....Very good settings which seem to further suggest mystery.
DETAIL .....No slips
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Villain tries to trick and scare hero out of inheritance; surprise finish in return of man supposedly dead.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,900 feet

This certainly started off like a regular whirlwind and showed a fine lot of mystery punctuated frequently by some flashes of fine comedy. But evidently the pace was too hard to maintain throughout and before the picture has passed the half-way mark the interest begins to slacken and the action becomes draggy owing to a lack of fresh complications and a tiresome stretching out of those already introduced.

And it surely looks as if H. B. Warner had written in his contract that he should have so many scenes and so many closeups to himself. For there is scene after scene in "Haunting Shadows" that shows him investigating the mysterious old house that are held altogether too long and that are, in many cases, unnecessary besides.

This centering of all the action, or footage rather, on the star and the absence of fresh twists to capture the interest as the film rolls on is responsible for a big turn in the picture's character after the first two reels. The action loses its pep and sparkle, the mystery instead of maintaining suspense, merely becomes aggravatingly mystifying and the spectator sits and awaits the ending restlessly.

Warner appears as John Glenarm who inherits a mysterious old house in a little Indiana town from his grandfather. By the conditions of the will he must live in the house a year else forfeit his entire fortune to a certain Marian Devereaux who resides at a boarding school a short distance away.

Glenarm meets Marian and falls in love with her but she represents herself as someone else and tells him that Marian is something of a prude and an old maid. Pickering, attorney for the Glenarm estate is desirous of making the hero forfeit the fortune and aims to marry Marian himself thus gaining control of the money. To gain his ends he makes life a series of dangers for Glenarm by hiring men to haunt the house, while Glenarm's butler also acts strangely. In the end when Pickering and his thugs are attacking Glenarm, his grandfather, who is still quite alive, returns and the attorney is taken off to jail while the young people receive the old man's blessing.

Supporting the star are Marguerite Livingston, Charles H. Mailes, Edward Piel, Frank Lanning, Florence Oberle and Harry Kendall.

Mention Source of Story and Denote Its Type

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

By mentioning the source of this picture, Meredith Nicholson's "House of a Thousand Candles" and dwelling on its mystery type, you should be able to draw the people in. The picture gets away to such a good start that there is a probability that it will hold up pretty well with many until the end even though some of its scenes may be tiring.

The kicks you get on it won't be strenuous, however, and it is possible that you may get by without any. H. B. Warner is a well known picture star by this time and no one questions his acting ability. Feature him prominently along with the source of the story and the results should show very well at the box office. The novel on which this is based has been done in pictures before but in these modern days of picture exploitation the exhibitor should be able to cash in on this picture because of the readers of the novel to a greater extent than he could have when the first picture was made.

Old Stuff Dressed Up with Prologue and Fancy Title Void of Entertainment

Robert Warwick in
"THE TREE OF KNOWLEDGE"

Paramount—Artcraft

DIRECTOR .....William C. DeMille
AUTHOR .....R. C. Carton
SCENARIO BY .....Margaret Turnbull
CAMERAMAN ..... Guy Wilky
AS A WHOLE.....An idea that has been done thousands of times but is again presented under a fancy title and a prologue.
STORY.....Uses ancient legend of Lilith and Adam as an excuse for present-day drama.
DIRECTION.....Allowed too wide a gap between sequences and left entirely too much to the audience's imagination—at the wrong time.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS .....Always clear
CAMERA WORK ..... First rate
STAR.....Did some good work but lidicrous story will prevent folks from appreciating it.
SUPPORT.....Well known cast with equally inappreciable parts.
EXTERIORS ..... Represent wealth and luxury
INTERIORS ..... Ditto
DETAIL .....Not so bad
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Deals with the workings of a "vamp" who picks 'em rich and often.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,940 feet

It is possible to blame one of several people for the choppy way in which "The Tree of Knowledge" is presented. The cutter may lay it to the director and the director to the continuity writer, but certainly somebody made a bad job of it. The manner in which the action shifts from one continent to another will make folks go some to keep up with it and they are bound to be confused.

The story, supposedly based on the action in the prologue, wouldn't amount to anything at all if this were true, for it merely consists of the appearance of a man and woman "dressed" as Adam and Eve. One instance of the choppiness of the production is where Warwick's best friend, played by Tom Forman, leaves England to find Warwick and urge him to return to his home. After flashing a title which gives this information the next scene opens up with the friend proposing to the vamp who has just forsaken Warwick after ruining him financially. This just happens and you don't know whether he has accomplished the object of his errand or not, until later on. The plot seems to be unfolded backwards. This might go all right in China, but not here.

The direction is not the best in the world, allowing the players to appear noticeably "acty" at times and failing to register sincerity of purpose at any point, and surely no one will sympathize with such a faint-hearted hero.

After Warwick is deserted by Kathlyn Williams, a mercenary adventuress, he returns to his home and is beginning to forget his past mistake when his friend returns bringing with him a wife who is none other than Kathlyn. The couple take up their abode at Warwick's home presumably for the time being until Bryan can reconcile his father to the marriage, but from all appearances this was merely another convenience on the part of the author.

When Kathlyn discovers that Bryan will probably lose his fortune she plans to elope with Loftus Roupelle, a wealthy sport, but Warwick discovers the plot and, in an attempt to prevent the lady from keeping her date, the contemplated outrage upon his friend, enhanced by his own dealings with Kathlyn, get the better of him, and he is succeeding very well in choking her when Bryan returns.

Kathlyn explains the situation by saying that the man in her life whom she had once mentioned to her husband was Warwick, whereupon Byran turns on his friend who accepts the circumstance rather than tell the truth. However, the wicked woman manages to get away with her next victim, leaving her husband to learn the truth and Warwick to propose to his ward, played by Wanda Hawley.

Secure a Good Supporting Program If You Show This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There is no reason why you should make a special effort to secure "The Tree of Knowledge" for it sure is a lemon tree and there's no knowledge to be plucked from it. You'll find no helpful advice in a practical way and from a standpoint of picture production, there is nothing new or worth while bothering about in this.

If you do present this to your audience go easy on promises and secure a good comedy or some other worth while short stuff to make up for a poor feature. You may use the name of the star if you think it advisable, but his acting in this one, which is really not bad, won't make an impression or be taken seriously because of the utterly foolish story.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Deals with wife's love for city's glamor and husband's trick to disillusion her.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,972 feet

"Forbidden" is a picture that comes out flat-footed with the suggestion that city folks all lean to the immoral while the clean country tends to the good and pure and sweet. Just remember that everyone who lives in a city either has lived in the country or wants to, so that this is sure-fire as to appeal. Of course, the small-town folks will like it. It reminds me of the question Charlie Winninger asks up at the Winter Garden: "Why will a fellow from the country come to the city and work his head off in order to make money enough to be able to live in the country?" Think it over!

Maddie Irwin, the girl played by Mildred Harris Chaplin in the present instance, longs for the city.

On the other hand there is Fred Worthington also from Maddie's village, who has tasted five years of what money and the city can bring him and has become disgusted with it all. They marry and Maddie insists on the city so at length they journey there. But Fred refuses to take Maddie out and they quarrel and separate, he supposedly going back to the country.

Maddie decides on a Chinatown sight-seeing tour. She gets as far as an opium den when a bearded stranger attacks her. He is shot by Maddie's old country sweetheart who has seen and followed her. After that Maddie's one thought is to go back to Fred and the country. Fred appears with a bandaged arm and later he sneaks off and burns the beard he wore when he played villain to take the fun out of the city for Maddie!

Director Lois Weber has dressed her picture elegantly and has secured a lot of real lavish interiors in which to stage much of the action.

The plot never reaches any great dramatic heights but the little trick played on Maddie by friend husband is clever enough and well enough handled (as the disguise he wears is excellent) to furnish a real surprise at the finish that will quite likely take the little curse off the unreality of the plot.

Nothing Small About the Advertising Value of This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Lois Weber Production of "FORBIDDEN"
Jewel—Universal

There are certainly enough advertising angles to this to make it a winner. The star, the director, the title and the fact that Priscilla Dean is in the cast. She hasn't a big enough part to call for a co-starring billing but the line "with Priscilla Dean" could be included to advantage.

Center plenty of attention on Lois Weber, the producer. and mention some of the dozens of great successes she has made. You will find that all your fans are taking an exceptional interest these days in the item of "Who made the production?"

Give the title a good play. It's catching and can be elaborated on in advertising readers so that it will attract no end of attention.

Wholesome Sentiment and Sure-Fire Drama in This

"OTHER MEN'S SHOES"
Edgar Lewis Prod., Inc.—Pathe

DIRECTOR .....Edgar Lewis
AUTHOR .....Andrew Soutar
SCENARIO BY .....George D. Proctor
CAMERAMAN ..... Everett Horn
AS A WHOLE.....Good wholesome production filled with sure-fire sentiment, comedy and drama; will "get" any audience.
STORY.....Has some loop-holes but action is swift and constantly increasing in interest so story always convinces and holds.
DIRECTION.....Brings out all the highlights successfully; has created a real "audience" picture.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Realistic
CAMERA WORK..... Commendable
FEATURED PLAYER.....Craufurd Kent gives two effective and well defined characterizations.
SUPPORT ..... Excellent
EXTERIORS .....Always appropriate
INTERIORS.....Realistic and thoroughly appropriate.
DETAIL.....All details well handled
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Strong man assumes place of weak brother and wins his battles.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....6,425 feet

Edgar Lewis has surely filled this with wonderful audience-getting material and although at various points it would be a simple matter to point out holes in the construction of the story, the fact remains that the merits of the picture are so many and so well calculated to reach the sympathies of the average picture audience that the flaws are altogether overwhelmed.

Stephen Browning, a minister in a small city, is unable to cope with the situation created by the strong opposition in his parish, fostered and headed by Creeke, his rival in love. A weakling, he gives up the fight and is afraid to face the issue. James, his brother who has spent a term in prison, returns to his home and takes Stephen's place, conquering over his enemies and winning all the church elders to his side.

Even then Stephen will not step back into his character and James is obliged to go on playing the imposter and, all the while, falling deeper in love with Irene Manton, the girl that Stephen loves. Creeke, conspiring with Dreener, a man who knew James in jail, conspires to make public the career of the minister's wayward brother at a meeting called to raise funds for an orphanage and educational institution. They hope by so doing to turn the parish against its pastor. Quite the contrary, however, James wins them all over to his side by confessing the whole imposition. Dreener, assaulting Stephen mistaking him for James, kills him and this leaves James free to win the love of Irene. The picture ends happily and with a good laugh with the children of the orphanage looking on while hero and heroine go into the final "clinch."

There are many happily sentimental scenes between James and the children of the town, who are headed by little Bobby Connolly.

The Old English-Japanese Romance Unassisted by Imagination on Author's Part

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Englishman falls in love with ward of Jap's afterwards discovering her to be of English birth.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,442 feet

The authors of "When a Man Loves" didn't overwork their imaginations to any great extent in writing this vehicle for Earle Williams. They unearthed the time-honored plot about the white man, in this case an Englishman, who falls in love with a girl he meets in Japan who is the ward of a Japanese shop keeper. Their romance progresses happily, menaced ever so little by the girl's native suitor, until a female villain in love with the Englishman sticks her finger in the pie.

She writes home to the hero's father saying that his son is "making a fool of himself" and requesting him "to act quickly." Father seems to sense the entire situation from these few lines and summons his son home by a cable which says he's near death's door.

Of course hero hasn't got time to bid his sweetheart good-bye and female villain gets in her dirty work by intercepting his note to her and then telling the girl that hero only wanted to use her as one of the characters in the book he was writing.

Hero discovers the ruse when he gets home and jumps back to Japan in two scenes or so. He explains things to the girl and then jumps back to England with her as his wife. The haughty old father will have none of his muchly traveling son until his old friend arrives on the scene and explains that his daughter-in-law is none other than his daughter in fact and tells a story of a lost wife and baby to prove it Thus with the sugar spread thickly the picture draws to a saccharine conclusion.

This is more or less old stuff from first to last and doesn't hold any great interest inasmuch as it is all so obvious. It looks as if the authors sat themselves down and said, "Well, Earle needs a story, let's see, why not give him one of the variations on 'Madame Butterfly'" and then acted accordingly without giving either serious thought or imagination to the matter.

There is to be sure nothing flagrantly bad about the picture but at the same time there is certainly nothing conspicuously meritorious. But its obviousness and lack of imagination will probably dismiss a rather dissatisfied audience.

Earle Williams is his usual gentlemanly self as the hero. Margaret Loomis has the role of the girl, Yuri San, even the character name shows nothing new, while Barbara Tennant, Thomas Guise and George Hall are others.

Let It Go By If You Can; If You Play It Do So Quietly

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This picture certainly has none of those qualities which will stamp your theater as a place where the best pictures are to be seen. It's conventional in story idea, in development and general treatment, and there is no well maintained suspense or good climax to the plot. The best thing to do under the circumstances is to let it go by. It is such pictures as these that are way below the average in story value that bring down a theater's standard.

If it's got to be played put the soft pedal on in talking about it in the advertising and concentrate on Earle Williams. He certainly knows how to deport himself as a gentleman even though his part here refuses to give him any great acting opportunities.

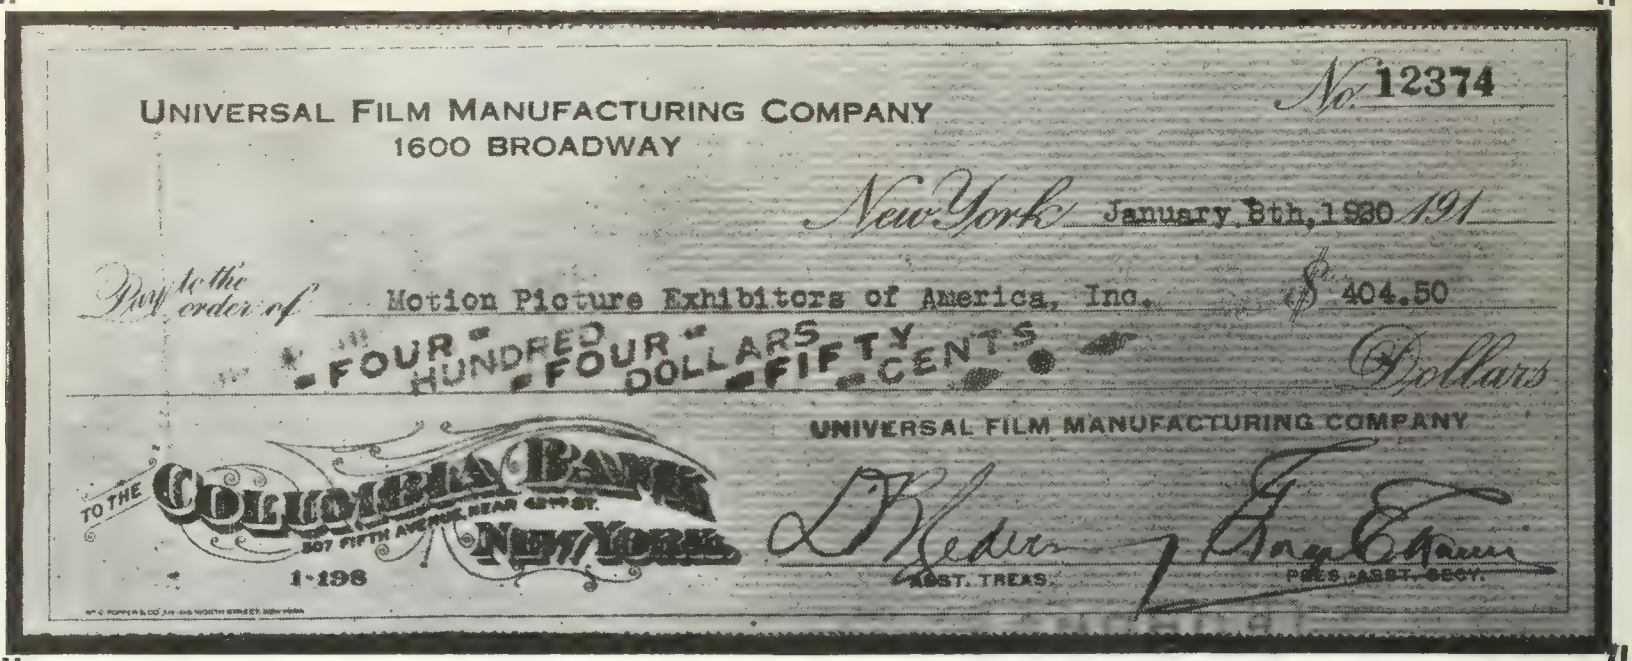
MONEY TALKS!



TO THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS:—

The money represented by the above check is the first ever paid to exhibitors for the showing of educational and industrial pictures which they have received without charge. This amount was paid to be distributed among exhibitors for the showing of HEADS WIN in Chicago and vicinity.

The arrangement between the UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY and the MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA, INC., under which this money was paid is NOT AN EXCLUSIVE ONE AND NEVER HAS BEEN. ANY OTHER PRODUCER OF MOTION PICTURES IS AT LIBERTY TO ENJOY THE SAME PRIVILEGES THAT THE UNIVERSAL HAS AND DOES ENJOY IN REGARD TO EDUCATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL FILMS.

IN REPLY TO SLURRING CHARGES MADE IN RECENT TRADE PAPER ADVERTISEMENTS

1.—First, the so-called Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association has failed to answer any of the pertinent questions, evidently for reasons best known to themselves.

2.—Mr. H. A. Mintz ranks as one of the high-grade attorneys of New England. The contract as proposed was arranged so that the Association in the event of any slip-up would not be involved with heavy legal fees.

3.—As a matter of fact no contract was ever executed. It was submitted to the Cleveland gentleman in a tentative form and he promptly turned it over to the men who were trying to tear down one big exhibitors' movement for personal reasons. It was decided best not to further consult Mr. Lustig, and as president I am only too pleased that this gentleman has tendered his resignation. It would have shown better business ethics to have resigned first than to have used a committee membership against the best interests of the Association.

4.—The League would have made a large sum of money had the New York Tribune seen fit to continue negotiations. Under the proposed contract the League would have received the first $10,000 earned and continuous profits thereafter.

5.—If this so-called Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association's idea of commercial independence means the censorship of the screen by a self constituted committee, then I am very glad that I stand for open competition whereby each and every exhibitor will receive direct remuneration for the use of his screen for advertising purposes.

6.—As to comparison of records, we are glad to have the Exhibitors of the country decide as to the calibre of the men concerned in this controversy, and to their honest intent for the best interests of the industry.

Some Short Reels

"India," Mentor

Two widely different sections make up this colored Mentor offering, which opens with a scenic study, shot in India, and which has another portion devoted to a pair of lion cubs. The former is rich in the elaborate architecture of the Orient, and includes numerous beautiful scenes taken along the banks of a river, showing the temples and other structures. In addition to the lion cubs, some monkeys, a duck and a pretty little girl appear, and it will certainly appeal. As good a colored one-reeler as has been seen hereabouts in a long while.

"His Fatal Bite," Gaiety Comedies

You have probably at some time or other experienced the sensation of having a dentist poke his different tools into your mouth, jab his thumb into your eye, torture you slowly with a variety of drills and pincers and otherwise annoy you. This Gaiety comedy which features George Ovey, in the role of a dentist, shows several amusing scenes in a dental parlor. Some years ago, there were several pictures in which dentists were satirized, but recently, there have not been very many films of that type. This has a fairly clever theme, although not a strictly novel one, and although it ends rather suddenly, the good work of the cast and commendable direction, will get it across in good fashion.

"Holland's Rustic Life and Waterways," Educational

Scenic pictures of Holland must have their wind-mills, and although almost sixty per cent. of this deals with the different Dutch types of people, a wind-mill shot opens producing a fine effect, and a satisfactory cloud bits closes. Much that is beautiful and colored is included in the reel which is up to the mark. The usual fault with colored productions—the manner in which faces are tinted, or allowed to remain blank, is to be observed here, but pictures of this sort are enjoying great popularity just at present and you will probably please your crowd if you sign to play it.

"The Screaming Shadow," Hallmark

People always have an awe for the supernatural or that which mystifies them. In serials, especially, has it been found profitable to deal with unknown quantities, and thus impress those who are fond of the drawn-out drama. "The Screaming Shadow" is said to be based on the monkey-gland theory of the prolongation of human life, but is actually a weird concoction of the combined imaginations of J. Grubb Alexander and Harvey Gates. It has little to do with the recently discovered idea if the first three episodes may be taken as a criterion. Four mythical maids, each of them having retained youth and beauty through over a thousand years, are supposed to bear on their personages the secret to permanent life and a crystal, in possession of the villain is the key which can unravel the mystery. Beyond that little is clear. There is some sort of a squabble over the possession of the European kingdom of Burgonia, and a resemblance between one of the quartet of virgins and a girl newspaper reporter furnishes one of the big twists in the theme.

Some semi-invisible sort of an arch-criminal is the cause of several murders, and the spectator sees little but his shadow most of the time. He is in the habit of uttering a cry like the roar of a lion and those whose earthly existence has terminated, bear a strange mark—the imprint of a set of teeth. In each episode someone is killed, everyone appears to be fighting everyone else, and much to think about is in evidence.

There is no great danger of anyone's outguessing this, nor any great likelihood that they'll be able to keep up with the story, but it will draw.

One great thing in its favor is that it is out of the ordinary, and that will probably get them to come and see it, although they probably won't know what idea the authors are trying to convey to them for a long while. Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber are starred, and Joe Girard plays the leading heavy role. Burke Thorne directed and King Grey cranked the camera.

"The Black Secret." Pathe

George B. Seitz, who was co-starred with Marguerite Curtot in "Bound and Gagged," and who is directing this serial, makes his entry into this production in the eleventh episode, called "The Death Studio." He plays a German spy this time, and certainly helps to thrill 'em.

Bray Pictograph, 419, Goldwyn

Effects of the moon and sun on tides are dealt with in a series of diagrams that make up the opening portion of this Bray Pictograph, which has a part devoted to the hunting of wild ducks following, and an animated cartoon, called "A Chip Off the Old Block" closing. On the whole, this is a creditable screen magazine, although by no means the best of the series.

"Why Go Home?" Pathe

Several corking situations, in which a colored youngster, Snub Pollard and other members of the cast figured, made the start of this a riot, but towards the finish, it developed into a series of chases and shooting. Although the latter part of this is not up to the standard of what goes before, this one-reeler will probably prove acceptable almost anywhere. It includes much that is commendable.

"The Rink," Clark—Cornelius

Men and women who have laughed at Charles Chaplin the vagabond, policeman, floorwalker, waiter and so on, will surely laugh at Charlie, the skater. The Chaplin feet on level ground provoke mirth, and on rollers, they are just as funny. At the start, a great deal of this is hackneyed stuff, but after a while, when the star starts traveling about the rink, his antics provoke an unlimited amount of mirth. Chaplin can skate and he shows to fine advantage here. The superfine quality of the greatest part of the offering make the re-issue valuable.

"The Story of the Jaguar," Universal

Jaguars, according to the information dealt out by Major Jack Allen who wrote and produced this, are fierce animals and exceptionally difficult to capture. Regardless of that fact, however, the Major skips out to the jungle and using a few feet of rope captures one of the animals, and according to the story wins a wager. Undoubtedly, this will prove of interest, for it has one big thrill in the scene showing the animal falling upon one of the hunters and the manner in which it is shot, and much more that will hold the eye. A short subject worth a bit of exploitation.

"Chicken a la Cabaret," Fox

Chester Conklin is the shining light in this knockabout affair from Hampton Del Ruth's fun factory. He plays the role of the chief of police and, with Harry Booker, as the mayor, gets taken in by a pair of slick crooks, one of whom is Billy Armstrong. The crooks offer their services to assist the policemen's benefit and by an old and still very funny trick they make off with all the watches in the party. A wild chase then ensues with the crooks operating their car with its garage as a covering. There's some great comedy business in the chase concerning the efforts of the police to overtake the garage and gain admittance to it. Eventually chasers and chasees are blown skyward by dynamite. They descend into the police station where the crooks are promptly jailed. There are enough laughs in this to put it in the best slapstick class.

37 WD 1/18/20

Short Reels

"The Bull Thrower," Century—Universal

A moonshiner, cast into some land where bandits flourish and liquor has been banned, puts over most of the comedy in this. Presumably, the scene of the action is Mexico, and the hero has to give an acceptable exhibition of the toreador's skill to win the hand of the fair maid. And this is where the direction slipped up, for the manner in which it has been screened is not effective. The scenes where the characters jump out of the enclosure wherein is supposed to stamp about the wild bull gives no one cause to imagine that what is supposed to happen, really occurs. Some of the stuff included in the piece is really clever, but it has several faults that are a handicap.

"Naughty Lions and Wild Men," Century—Universal

Plot has been made subordinate to action in which animal novelty is much in evidence, in this two-reel comedy which is much better than some similar subjects turned out by this company recently. Several varieties of animals, lions, leopards, monkeys, and their young aré seen in it. Shots of a mother ape, with her babe clining to her will appeal, and there are other bits that will draw exclamations from your audience. For the greater part, the material in the offering will prove laugh-provoking. Fishback directed, and Charles Gay, animal tamer, is credited with assisting.

Bray Pictograph, No. 416—Goldwyn

This is one of the finest screen magazines turned out by any one in a long time. Four subjects, one more than usual, are dealt with, and each of them is treated in splendid fashion. "A Glimpse of New Zealand," the opening part, which consists of scenes taken along the Wanganui River, is one of the most beautiful scenic bits screened. The tinting, a delicate shade of pink, and rich blue being the colors used, is superb and serves to bring out its splendor. Colonel William Barclay Parsons, noted engineer and designer of various transportation systems occupies the position of prominence in the next section, and then comes a cute bit called "Baby Bruin." A commendable animated cartoon, entitled "Sauce for the Goose," directed by Vernon Stallings, winds up the reel.

"Eventide"—Ford-Goldwyn

Carefully tinted and finely photographed, the scenic portion which opens registers a pleasing impression. Cloudy sky effects feature that part and are of merit. A second portion is devoted to the beaver, ad a third deals with the Canadian Porcupine. All of it is filmed excellently, and it marks a deviation from the string of industrial pictures turned out by Ford.

"Good Little Brownie"—Century-Universal

Bathing damsels in tight-fitting one-piece apparel, that permits a considerable limb display occupy the center of the screen for a considerable portion of the time in this two-reeler, which features Brownie, Century's educated dog. If the censors do not order much of the beach stuff out, for there is a considerable amount of footage devoted to the capers of the girls who sprawl all over each other in the most unconvetnional fashion, it may get by, for there is a considerable amount of humorous material included. The plot has been used before, the best part of the production being some of the business toward the beginning, and that really is not essential to the story.

"Bubbles," Ford—Goldwyn

Following the production of a reel consisting of some scenic stuff and portions devoted to animals, Ford has turned out another industrial concerning soap, telling of the production of that article in reasonably interesting fashion. On the whole, a creditable offering of its type.

"Harmony Ranch"—Universal

A fair story, the basic theme of which is not very uncommon, and which has a few points that will cause the critical to question the plausibility of the entire affair, will probably get this over in the smaller houses. Hoot Gibson heads the cast and does his share of the work in acceptable style. You can probably use this if your crowd likes his stuff. It is not very thrilling, but hits an even pace, and if they're not very particular, they'll overlook its weaknesses.

"Where Did You Get That Hat?"—Famous

Hats—all details about the manner in which they are manufactured—are taken up in the second issue of the Paramount Industrial Magazine. Unlike the first issue, instead of demonstrating the way in which the finished product is used, this shows the scenes at one of the Stetson hat factories. Very good handling of the subject and a worth-while addition to your bill if you happen to need an offering of this nature.

Another Mentor Scenic

Three parts make up another colored Mentor one-reeler which should prove acceptable. It opens with a portion called "Wedding Bells in Malaysia." After that, there is an exquisitely tinted section which deals with the cultivation of the dahlia. Everyone of the numerous varieties of this flower is shown and this part will certainly appeal to the eye. Closing is some stuff shot along the seacoast of Spain and it includes some effective bits. Although the different parts of this have very little in common, the reel will probably go well in the smaller and neighborhood houses, where crowds are inclined to prefer variety.

"The Millionaire Paupers"—National

Several humorous bits of comedy business and a fairly clever plot will get this hall room boy two-reeler over. Some of the stuff—the closing shot in which the boys ride home in garbage cans, the restaurant scene and one or two other portions are exceedingly funny, but there are some knockabout bits that are not very effective. This has been stretched just a bit, but it is nevertheless, a creditable offering.

"The Floor Below"—Pathe

Neither the theme of this one-reeler which stars Snub Pollard, nor the incidents connected with it are very much to enthuse over. It deals with two henpecked husbands, who on the advice of their aged grand-father, determine to rule their households and succeed in intimidating their wives by shooting off revolvers. The father of one of the wives appears and some clever chase stuff—the only really laughable portion of the production—follows. The finish of the picture shows both old men acting humbly before their strong-minded wives.

"The Sure Cure," National—Goldwyn

Hypocondria, defined early in this two-reeler, with a grammatical error in the explanation, is dealt with lightly in the story by Robert McGowan. The Carter De Havens play the leads in the piece and perform in their usual manner. Several of the situations are very funny, but the stuff aboard the boat is not as good as most of that in the early portion. Incidentally, there was too much footage devoted to the part of the picture which depicts the condition of the youthful husband, and too little to explain the manner in which he is cured. Certainly, that could have been taken up more fully. The story deals with a young man who is firmly convinced that he has a varied assortment of illnesses. Old and apparently wise physicians continually feed medicine to him and it takes a more modern doctor to prescribe a trip to sea for him. Aboard the liner, he eventually realizes that his troubles were imaginary.

Short Reels

"Children of the Netherlands," Mentor

Dutch youngsters have been pictured by artists more than once, together with their scenic surroundings in Holland, and this one-reeler has several close-ups and other interesting shots of the kiddies. The manner in which the stuff has been tinted is not as good as it might be in places and mars the offering somewhat. A second portion, devoted to the wild birds of Scotland is better as far as the tinting is concerned. The close views are especially commendable, regarded from the angles of photography and coloring.

"Islands of Japan," Mentor

Here is a colored reel that from beginning to end is replete with bits of beauty—an offering that has been tinted and photographed in artistic style. The second and principal portion shows the territory of the Japanese islands of Matsushima and Kyushu, the lakes, hills, rapids and waterfalls of the country, and includes a sunset that is really remarkable. Parrots of Australia, green and yellow are dealt with in the first part and hold the eye. They look especially pretty against the background of leaves and oranges, being perched on the branches of orange trees.

"Making Elsie Good," Universal

Youngsters—several of them—appear in a fairy-tale offering that will go well with the children and many of the older folks. The little girl who plays the lead—a blond—is pleasing and the others do as well as may be expected. This deals with the dream of a girl who has several undesirable traits, among them being snobbishness. While sleeping, she is placed in a position where she realizes that she has acted improperly and when she wakes up reforms.

"Jits and Wits," Rival Film

Not very long ago, a great many comedians imitated Charles Chaplin, but the Chaplin craze has died down somewhat, and only a few do it now-a-days. The Rival Film Co., in its initial production, starring Al Joy, has a comedy built on an acceptable theme and one that has a few incidents that are funny, although much of it is not as bright as it might be. Whatever his merits may be otherwise, however, Joy's impersonation of Chaplin leaves much to be desired, as do the imitations of most of the others who try to duplicate the wabble and Chaplin's other characteristics. The director did not do as well as he might have done with situations and the offering lags somewhat. A few good situations will go a great way towards helping this along, but they can not make it a hit.

"Informing a Nation," Encyclopedia Americana

Publishing periodicals and books is a subject that has not been touched very recently by producers of Educational pictures, and the organization which is turning out the Encyclopedia Americana, has shown in good fashion the manner in which that publication is made ready for the purchaser. Some of the steps shown are quite familiar, but the gilding and marbling of edges as well as some other processes are not as well known to the average spectator. This sheds light on the matter and also gives publicity to the new encyclopedia, but in a careful and wise manner.

"The Jay Bird," Universal

Unlike the type of pictures Hoot Gibson has been making for some time, this two-reeler is more like the modern cinema drama as far as the manner in which the story has been worked out and the way in which it has been produced, are concerned. It has some very good comedy relief and is thoroughly wholesome. The story is built on a much hackneyed theme, but has been screened in a satisfactory manner and will probably prove acceptable. If your crowd has been taking to the recent Hoot Gibson pictures, you will be wise to book this.

"Lao Kai," Mentor

Scenes photographed in Lao Kai, French Indo China, make up the earlier portion of this Mentor scenic, colored as usual. A great deal of the tinting is of a high standard. "Hunting a Rabbit" is the title of the second and closing part. In certain localities, rabbits are pests and have to be eliminated, and this shows the various ways in which the task is accomplished. A fair reel.

Screen Smiles, Z and No. 31, Screen Smiles, Inc.

With a new finish, a neat piece of animation, instead of the old one, Screen Smiles is an improved offering. At present the stuff at the finish is drawn out in black on white but having it correspond to the rest of the reel, that is, having the figures at the finish marked in white on dark blue, will add more improvement. The remarks included refer lightly, and cleverly to profiteering, landlords, prohibition, marriage, divorce, the Bolsheviki, I. W. W.'s, the Monkey Gland theory, prohibition, etc.

"Meat Again," Ford—Goldwyn

Recently there was a Ford release that pictured the cutting of meat, and this reel deals with some of the by-products of the meat. It shows the canning processes, sausage-making, what is done with hog bristles and the manufacturing of butterine. This is a fair educational subject, but not a particularly effective production to offer as entertainment.

"The Nooze Weekly," Fox

Humorists have overlooked, hitherto to all appearances, the usual screen news weekly, and in this Mutt and Jeff one-reeler Fox has a novel subject. It has been handled in good fashion, and the only regret is that it is so short—that there was not enough space devoted to the ridicule of other events depicted in news reels. In producing this, they strayed somewhat from the original idea and included several bits of business that might have been used elsewhere to better advantage, but the stuff is funny.

"The Line Runners," Universal

Whether or not this entire production, a two-reeler, was meant to be satirical, is a matter that is open to question, for either much of it was meant as a sort of subtle comedy, or there was much amiss with the work of the cast and direction. The photography and lightings in many places are excellent, in fact, the manner in which this has been screened is generally satisfactory. The story, however, smacks of the type of western popular some time ago, and will draw laughs from the critical members of your audience. There is one big kid towards the finish, when it is explained that a man of large proportions, wearing the broad-brimmed black slouch hat usually associated with heavies, in pictures of this type, and smoking a cigar with great vivacity, has nothing to do with the story, and is about to leave town. It's a bit that will get a laugh.

"The Heart Beneath"—Capital

Camera work, which is of high order throughout, features what is otherwise a more or less mediocre offering. Neal Hart plays the stellar role in the piece which is built around an eternal triangle story of the type that has been used frequently, and in similar form very recently by another company. From the very start, the conclusion is obvious and the average fan will probably outguess it without deep thought. It deals with a "city feller" who comes out to a ranch on business, but stays and leads the cow puncher's wife astray. The husband, however, arrives in time to avoid the disruption of his family and order the villain to board the first train for home. Included in the cast are Marie James, who plays the feminine lead; Joe Rickson, the villain and Inez Gommez.

"All for the Doughbag," Century—Universal

J. A. Howe wrote and directed this farce which starts in fine fashion and continues well until almost the very end, when there is just a bit too much of the riotous stuff. A dog does some exceptionally fine work at the beginning and there are two male comedians who handle their work in as fine a manner as could be desired. The youthful comedienne handles her character acceptably and but for the fact that there is too much slapstick comedy towards the culmination, this is almost certain to score. There is some excellent business in the early portion, and that will more than help get this over.

Why We Refused to Sell for One Hundred Thousand Dollars

THE day after "Empty Arms" was turned over to us by Director Frank Reicher, a well-known distributor tendered us a point-blank offer of $100,000 guarantee on the sale. This offer did not appeal to us, because we had spent over sixty thousand dollars in producing the picture and were cognizant of the fact that, in it, we have one of those master productions that strikes the industry about every three or four years. But the distributor insisted that his offer was merely a guarantee; that the amount "Empty Arms" could command, might run close to seven figures.

Then, in the course of the discussion, the head of our advertising department apologized for interrupting us, and said: "It is peculiar that you should offer $100,000 for 'Empty Arms,' for I have here in my hand my Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet, which I was just about to hand to Mr. Park."

"What is the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet?" asked the well-known distributor.

"It's nothing more than a book of printed suggestions that show the exhibitor who books 'Empty Arms' how easily he can put it over, and I consider it worth $100,000," replied our advertising manager.

At first, we must confess, we thought the A. M. had lost his reason. We knew that he had been working day and night inventing valuable promotion "stunts," but, after ten minutes of discussion, he convinced us that he was right.

At parting, the well-known distributor raised his offer to a sum that the average independent producer would sell three pictures for; but in justice to we were forced to reject.

The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet

WHEN the advertising manager entered the conference immediately after the well-known distributor made his original offer, he said:

"The idea in 'Empty Arms' is one never before touched. Its originality is worth a great deal. But the idea is of such importance at this time, that I find our picture can command over a hundred thousand dollars worth of advertising in every important city.

"How do I know? Well, I have written to newspaper editors, civic authorities, educators and men and women in public life, club officials, doctors, lawyers and other professionals. In every city, interest in the subject contained in 'Empty Arms' is so great, that, if we were to try to arouse this interest with paid advertising, it would cost over a hundred thousand dollars to do it."

The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet Tells the Whole Story; It Covers the Box-Office Possibilities of "Empty Arms" from Every Angle. A Copy of It Will Gladly be Sent Only to Those Exhibitors and States Right Buyers Who Personally Sign On Their Business Stationery a Request for It.

WRITTEN BY WILLARD KING BRADLEY

How Lester Park and Edward Whiteside produced "EMPTY ARMS"

AFTER a hundred or more stories suitable for screen production were submitted to us by the foremost authors of America, we selected the script of a young writer, Willard King Bradley, as the most original in the batch, and the most original we had seen in years. The story, dealing with the Gargantuan question of Motherhood, demanded the finest artistic talent procurable. Frank Reicher, responsible for many Paramount and Metro successes, was chosen to direct "Empty Arms," because we figured that he alone could handle a great number of its exceedingly difficult scenes, the majority of which were at once intensely dramatic and unusually delicate. Mr. Reicher immediately surrounded himself with the foremost technicians. Gail Kane, famous star of screen and stage, who had just closed in the Broadway success, "The Woman in Room 13," was signed to star; then a powerful cast, including Thurston Hall, J. Herbert Frank and other well-known screen celebrities, was engaged to support her. The picture was made; and, as we watched its progress, we believed that we had a master production. But we were not content to rest on our own judgment. We called in that famous editorial writer, Dr. Frank Crane, who contributed his unique services to the thought side of the picture.

It is the easiest thing in the world for a producer to deal in twelve-cylinder adjectives, and to megaphone it from the housetops that his picture is supreme. We are so confident of the success of "Empty Arms" that we are more than willing to simply place it in the hands of the buyers and exchange men, and let the screen do the talking. We are so certain that they will say that we have *under*estimated it, that we will stake our future success on it! Which is saying volumes.

EMPTY

Starring GAIL KANE

THE production alone will stand on its merits. But there is something else we have to offer which makes "Empty Arms" a picture plus. This "something else" is the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet, prepared by our advertising department.

United-Hallmark Deal

Berst Signs Contract Whereby United Becomes Distributor of Hall's Product

J. A. Berst, closed contracts last week whereby United Picture Theatres of which he is president, assumes the physical distribution of the Hallmark productions. The deal went into effect yesterday.

This announcement is evidently the one which Mr. Berst promised at the time he closed the contract taking over the Triangle exchanges and the Triangle productions. It is regarded as a move that materially strengthens the United Picture Theaters.

It is also announced that Berst has still further deals under way including the acquiring of important works for production at United's own studios. Both distribution and production activities of United will still be under Mr. Berst's direct control.

It was stated at the Robertson-Cole offices that the report last week regarding the taking over by that company of the physical distribution of Hallmark productions was merely a temporary arrangement until Mr. Berst and Mr. Hall perfected the new deal.

Magnet Exchange Has Fire

Everyone got all het up, the maidenly stenographers dashed downstairs, all of the available Pyrene was used up, and some damage, the extent of which is unknown, was caused when someone started a fire in the film room of the Magnet Exchange on the eighth floor of 729 Seventh Ave. The fire was extinguished before it could spread to the other rooms in the building.

The Blank chain includes houses in Des Moines, Marshalltown, Mason City, Davenport, Ia. and Omaha all first class theaters.

Ince Stays Home

Significance Attached By Virtue of Loew—Rowland Visit to the Coast

Although his office reported that they had no idea of his arrival it was confidently believed by a number of important executives that Ince would be here.

It developed Saturday that the probable reason for Mr. Ince delaying his departure for the East was because of the trip West by Marcus Loew and Richard A. Rowland of Metro. Messrs Loew and Rowland left yesterday for the coast.

Hollywood — Betty Blythe has been engaged by Universal to play the leading feminine role opposite Frank Mayo in a picture called "The Primrose Path," being directed by Christie Cabanne.

Work on a new Eric Stroheim production for Universal has been held up pending the company's success in obtaining the screen rights of the story. They are negotiating for Frank Norris's novel, "McTeague" the plot of which is laid in San Francisco and the Mojave Desert. It is understood that Gibson Gowland of "Blind Husbands" fame is to play the title role. Stroheim is now completing the cutting of his second picture, "The Devil's Pass Key," which is regarded as a sequel to "Blind Husbands."

Alice Lake has returned from San Francisco where she and 20 members of her company have been taking scenes for "Shore Acres."

The cast has been selected for "The Girl in the Mirror," from the novel of the same name by Elizabeth Jordan, which will go into production at Universal within the next few days. It includes Frank Mayo, Ray Ripley, Elinor Fair, Harry Hilliard, Claire Anderson, Arthur Hoyt, Ruth Royce and Bull Montana. The director will be Jack Ford.

Morris R. Schlank, producer of the Hank Mann comedies, has engaged Frederick Bennett, author of "The Radium Mystery," "The Lost Express," and several comedies featuring Arbuckle and Lyons-Moran, to write two-reel stories for the new series of comedies featuring Hank Mann.

The King W. Vidor company finished exteriors on the old Southern mansion at Sunland this week and now is at work on interiors.

The production of "Polly of the Storm Country," a Grace Miller White story, is in its last stages of completion. Mildred Harris Chaplin is starred.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

They are connecting "In Old Kentucky," starring Anita Stewart, with horse racing and the scheme is proving successful. At the Kinema, Los Angeles, the fact that there had been an Anita Stewart day at the Ascot Races, when she presented the winning jocky with a floral horseshoe, served to get an overflow crowd. At the Madison, Detroit, they are making the entrance look like a paddock entrance, with a sort of betting club within the lobby. There is a girl in jocky costume distributing heralds and night riders parade through the streets, in addition.

Dallas, Tex.—L. B. Remy, manager of the local Goldwyn exchange engineered an exploitation stunt with Ben Austin and Jake Newman, owners of the Gentry Dog and Pony Show. He made arrangements to have large white signs, advertising Goldwyn, attached to two elephants with the show. The company travels from town to town, and the elephants being a big attraction, the words "This is a Goldwyn Year"—Goldwyn Pictures, etc. are getting much attention.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Anita Stewart in "In Old Kentucky" packed them in at the New Lyric due to a large exploitation campaign put over by Arthur Abelson, manager. A tremendously large billboard—22 sheet long and ten sheets high was used, making it possible to put the words in eight foot letters. A negro jazz band paraded about town giving concerts before each performance and the stage setting of the original play served as the setting for the prologue. There was a lobby display with a horseshoe, 18 feet high and special boosting was given the song "In Old Kentucky." Confectionery establishments started serving the "Kentucky Mint Julep," and there were other advertising accessories including 10,000 one-sheet cards, 2,000 snipes, 10,000 circus heralds, 1,000 one sheet lithos and twenty-four sheet stands. The production ran for a full week with great success.

Hannibal, Mo.—An old school was used to crowd the Park when Geraldine Farrar in "Flame of the Desert" was presented. Souvenir Photograph Day was announced and a photograph of the grand opening motion picture star was offered each of the first 300 women entering. It worked.

Marianna, Ark.—T. E. Hobbs, manager of the Majestic, put "The Jinx," starring Mabel Normand over by using the circus parade stunt. Three prizes were offered to the children exhibiting the best wagon, coaster or cart rigged up to resemble a circus float. All of the displays were assembled in the parade, headed by a banner advertising the film. Interest was aroused and capacity business resulted.

Controversy Over French Actress

Ray Raymond, agent, declares that he is the representative of Gaby Marcy, the French actress who recently arrived here.

John J. Livingston who is handling her publicity here, states that Mr. Raymond may be her theatrical agent but that he is handling her picture offers.

"Empty Arms" Finished

Lester Park and Edward White side have finished "Empty Arms," the production with Gail Kane, Thurston Hall and Herbert Fortier. Frank Reicher directed, while Dr. Frank Crane, the editorial writer collaborated.

The story is by Willard Mack and Bradley.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

W. H. Productions have secured the backing of the American Legion for "Everybody's Business," which is on the state right market. Every post of the Legion will give the six reeler its support, and arrangements have been made to have the picture play a prominent part in the Americanization Drive now under way.

Cincinnati, O.—R. H. Haines, local First National branch manager had a special showing held here for those who claimed that they had never before seen a motion picture show. "Heart O' the Hills," which stars Mary Pickford was shown to the audience which consisted mainly of invalids. Included among them was a blind man to whom the titles were read, the situations being described by a friend.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Lew Cody tried a new stunt in conjunction with the run of "The Beloved Cheater" at the Symphony, conducting a love-note contest. The girl who wrote the best love letter to him was offered an opportunity to try-out for his next picture and the one who wrote the second best one, a prize of $25. Great interest was aroused in the production.

Denver, Col.—A fair exchange is no robbery, says the well known proverb, and E. J. Drucker, local branch manager for Hallmark, and the proprietor of one of the dry goods stores here adheres to the adage. "High Speed," is scheduled to open at one of the houses here shortly, and Drucker has made an arrangement with the store to place a display in one of the windows boosting that production. In return for the privilege, he has made arrangements with the exhibitors here to run slides regularly, explaining that copies of the book by Clinton H. Stagg, from which the picture is adapted, can be procured at the store.

Cleveland, O.—In order to get the editors of local newspapers to devote an increased amount of space to motion picture news, and to convince them of the fact that the public is interested in "The Inside Dope" and not only in what each picture is about, the Strand after booking a feature for a week's run, advertised only the name of the distributing company, the star and cast.

That scheme of advertising resulted in big business for "Her Kingdom of Dreams," First National, starring Anita Stewart. The editors are expected to give additional space to film news in the future.

In the Courts

He alleges he was engaged July 17 last by Samuel Grand and the contract was assigned to the Oliver Films. The defendant discontinued his services on Nov. 21 without cause, he says, and refused to pay him his compensation and profits. He says he was to have worked 25 weeks to Jan. 3 at $500, on which $3,000 is due him, and is entitled to $250 a week as his share of the profits.

Rembusch Wants Exhibitors Paid for Showing Weekly—Goldwyn's Ideas

Frank Rembusch, secretary of the M. P. E. of A. has sent the following wire to Henry Ford: "Protests are filed with the National Organization of Motion Picture Exhibitors against your charge for the use of 'Ford's Weekly'

"The importance, value and power of the motion picture screen is being recognized more each day.

"We are offered, not only free rentals for showing industrial, propaganda and advertising films but every exhibitor may now receive a nominal fee for showing these pictures.

"The Universal Film Co. have agreed to our request and they are now giving splendid industrial and propaganda pictures free to exhibitors and pay each theater a nominal fee for showing the picture.

"We ask that you refrain from further charge for the Ford Weekly to any exhibitor and also that you pay a nominal amount to every exhibitor who shows Ford Weekly.

"We feel that this is very fair and from the agitation now awakened on this question it will be very helpful to the Weekly for you to meet with our request and recommendation."

Gabriel L. Hess, of Goldwyn Pictures, who are distributing the Ford Weekly when informed of the Rembusch telegram said that the attitude taken by Rembusch was "all wrong."

"It is a fact," he said, "that we are paid a trifling cost for the Ford Weekly, but this hardly covers cost of distribution. Mr. Ford is preparing probably the very best educational ever offered in this country. In no way can it be construed as an advertisement. It costs him a large sum every year for its preparation, and the return is negligible."

Regarding F. P. Stock

Regarding Famous Players stock, the Evening Mail's financial editor said yesterday:

"A further break of five points in Famous Players, following a like drop yesterday, was attributed to rumors that the syndicate which late last fall underwrote $10,000,000 preferred had been unable to market anything like all of the offering, and that with the dissolution of the syndicate, expected next Thursday, the unsold balance would tie up so much capital as to possibly weaken the support to the common. While such comment seems rather farfetched, it was made a good deal of by the bears. Those who ought to know say that the company is making good progress, and they attribute the decline to technical conditions, expecting a 'comeback' when the market outlook is more favorable."

"Going to Hell"

Says Gest Regarding Wall Street Control of Theaters—Film Men's Version of the Idea

Chicago—Morris Gest, co-producer of "Chu-Chin Chow," "The Wanderer," and "Aphrodite," is quoted as saying without reservations that 'the American theater is going to hell."

Gest is not blaming the descent toward the Dante district on the recent war. Those culpable, the producer states, are Wall Street "doughboys," who have placed more than $100,000,000 in the movie pastime. They, he declares are slowly killing the spoken drama by buying up the country's leading theaters, the star actors and actresses and the "big league" producers with the purpose of furthering their individual interests in the motion picture industry.

Gest said he had been offered $1,000,000 for his soul and body" but declined. He intimated that others in the same work as himself who did not have the real interests of the theater at heart are "falling one by one."

"The American theater is in its greatest danger," he said. "The grasping hand of Wall Street is on it and when Wall Street gets a theater in hand it must die a natural death.

"No greater works of authors and composers have been done on empty stomachs. The fact is to-day that an author almost must write a play both for the stage and the screen. In the productions of Mr. Comstock and myself we never knew where we would get the money to pay for them. We didn't care. To-day I have a suit of clothes I can call my own. Artistry and filthy money are

Day Back from South America

John L. Day, South American representative of Famous Players has returned to New York from a five months' trip and states that exhibitors below the equator say European films will never replace American made pictures.

not and never will be good bed fellows.

"With the exception of those of a half dozen producers most of the theaters in America are now owned and controlled by motion pictures. Unless something is done within the next three years Wall Street will be in complete control of the theater. I do not want to live to see that day."

Answering Gest

It was impossible to obtain a statement from Adolph Zukor yesterday in response to the Gest statement, and H. D. H. Connick, who is reported to represent the financial interests in Famous said he had no statement to make, that any statement should come from Mr. Zukor who was the "sole owner and proprietor."

All of the prominent officials of Metro are out of town, and in the absence of Marcus Loew, David Bernstein of the Loew offices said: "I guess all of us know that Wall Street isn't throwing i ts money away. It never does. Wall Street invested in the picture business and theatrical business because it found a paying business. Wall Street will leave the showmen run the houses. It means that the more beautiful theaters and picture palaces will be available with Wall Street capital and that's all."

When the attention of Gabriel L. Hess of Goldwyn was directed to the Gest statements and when he was informed of the expression used by Gest who said "within the next three years Wall Street will be in complete control of the theater. I do not want to live to see the day," Mr. Hess said:

"Well, Gest had better call up Columbus 8200."

Investigation later developed that Columbus 8200 is the telephone number of Campbell's Funeral Church.

L. J. Selznick did not care to comment on the Gest statement "at this time."

Carl Laemmle, of Universal said: "Mr. Gest pays the moving picture industry the finest possible compliment when he says that Wall Street is investing in theaters throughout the country and turning them into moving picture houses. Whatever else may be said about Wall Street, it must be said that the men who constitute the financial power of America are men recognized for astuteness and business sagacity, therefore, if as Mr. Gest states, these men are investing in theaters for moving picture purposes, it is a self-evident fact that they recognize the great bulk of the American public wants moving picture entertainment.

"The trouble with a few theatrical producers is that they fail to realize the tremendous influence for good which is wielded by moving pictures, and cling to the old alibi—as Mr. Gest does in his interview—that there is no art in moving pictures. Mr. Gest asserts that 'artistry and filthy money are not, and never will be good bed-fellows.'

"Artistry, bosh! Under the guise of art, Mr. Gest recently presented in New York, a production which shocked even blase New York theater-goers, an dunder the instructions of city officials was subjected to the pruning knife, before the would suffer it further presentation Mr. Gest will have difficulty in mentioning any moving picture of recent production that ran so close to the edge as his production referred to."

Arthur James at Fox suggested that Mr. Gest might be seeking some publicity and referred to the telephone of the City Morgue, saying that it may prove an interesting spot for Mr. Gest.

Dwan to Finish Soon

Has Three Films Now in Various Stages of Production for Mayflower

Arthur Butler Graham, attorney for Allan Dwan, stated yesterday that Dwan will make a total of five productions for Mayflower instead of eight as originally contracted for.

Mr. Graham stated that Dwan felt he could not devote the proper attention to the productions and make eight in the time left under his contract, and so he had entered an agreement with Isaac Wolper of Mayflower whereby he will turn over to that company "The Luck of the Irish" and three more.

Isaac Wolper stated yesterday that Dwan's contract expires in August and that Dwan would make a total of six productions for Mayflower. These, according to Wolper are "Soldiers of Fortune" already released, "The Luck of the Irish," "The Heart of a Fool," "The Scoffer," "The Splendid Hazard" and one more which Wolper said has not been started yet. The last three mentioned above are in various stages of production.

Trustees Named

The Executive Committee, which will be the official administrative body for the directors and officers, also was elected by the directors with Harry O. Schwalbe as Chairman, N. H. Gordon and Moe Mark of the Mark Strand Co., New York.

The Board of Voting Trustees is clothed with powers of regulation more than sufficient to successfully prevent any monopoly of theater interests being affected within Associated First National Pictures, Inc., or in any separate territory in the country.

"No matter how much money Wall Street or any other financial source might pour into theaters," declared J. D. Williams, "the theater equities pledged to the new company cannot pass into other hands for voting purposes for a long time to come. If monied interests sought to buy every theater represented by franchise in Associated First National Pictures, the executive disposition of any effort which threatened screen independence in any instance would remain exclusively and absolutely with the five members of the Board of Voting Trustees. And this body is so constituted that it is obliged, to retain its powers, to work only in the inteersts of exhibitor independence and for te preservation of personal right and privilege for theater owners.

"This, then becomes tantamount to an absolute barrier to theater monopoly by any organization, whether its function is production, distribution, a combination of the two, or simply an investment group seeking domination of screens for reasons quite obvious but less tangible. They might buy every dollar's worth of equity in each of the five thousand and more theaters that will be affiliated with Associated First National pictures, but the Board of Voting Trustees would be absolutely free from the dictation of new ownership for a term of years, thereby preserving an independent market for independent stars and producers. And this absolute right to legislate the broad interests of the franchise members is so construed that it remains in force for the full limit accorded by the members themselves in convention at Atlantic City last week so long as its conduct shall be in harmony with every precept of exhibitor independence and freedom from monopolistic dictation as to what an exhibitor may or may not book for the theaters he owns or controls.

"An attack by trust-seeking capital in any one territory, or in any number of territories, will avail nothing toward the goal of monopoly and domination.

"The condition which was named in a recent statement that the 'American theater is going to hell' will find its greatest and most effectual stumbling block in the method of organization conceived, sanctioned and adopted by the exhibitors themselves and put into effect in Associated First National Pictures. Any man is absolutely right when he says that the interests blanketed under the general term, 'Wall Street,' have been striving, strenuously, for months and months to devise some means to the end that they could control production, distribution and exhibition. Their agents in the field brought the fact home to members of First National. The danger, and the real menace, with every certainty of realizing all of the dire possibilities predicted, became patent to our members and their exhibitor affiliations, with the result that it grew to be a unanimous sentiment that they, as independent theater owners, should take prompt and radical steps to protect their independence.

"It is freely prophesied in several quarters that unless something is done Wall Street will be in complete control of theaters within three years. It may seem a vanity or a brag, but it is genuinely true that the majority of the most important motion picture theater owners and operators in the country, have, within the week, so allied themselves and their properties, that there is no longer a probability that this can come to pass. If Wall Street, or its agents, wants theaters, now, and I mean theaters that will have an important part in making for production success, it will have to buy property and build them, or pay handsome prices to present exhibitors, and then be content for a considerable number of years, at least, to abide by the dictates and decisions of the independent theater owners whom they seek to oust or control."

Ratification by the exhibitor members of several important recommendations by the directors, will, it is said, make possible within the next three weeks, a detailed announcement of the actual organization work of the new company, and its method of functioning in relation to its present and future members, and with regard to stars, directors and producers.

)ntario Exchanges to Fight Clause Submitting Ads and Posters for Approval

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Toronto.—Exchanges in Ontario re up in arms over a new ruling vhich if not amended will become ffective March 7. The ruling subtitutes the following clause in the Theater and Cinematographs Act:

"(1) All posters, heralds, handills, cuts, newspaper and periodical dvertising, banners, slides, photorraphs, lobby displays, and all other dvertising matter in connection vith film displays, shall be submitted to the Inspector who shall thereupon examine and approve or disapprove of same.

"(2) Any person using or displaying any advertising matter without having had the same approved by he Inspector as provided in Clause 1) hereof, shall be guilty of an offense under the Act."

By some the above measures are declared unconstitutional and cannot be enforced as it is claimed it ncroaches on the liberties of the people. Others declare that they will never submit to it, and would top importing advertising accessoies altogether rather than take a hance on censorship.

Expert counsel will be engaged to ight the measure and it is quite apparent that the Ontario Governnent will have a battle on its hands The clauses place the sole power of pproving every form of advertising natter used in exploiting films in the ands of an inspector.

Farwell Dinner to Edward Godal

Edward Godal, the producer of "12.10" and head of the British and Colonial Film Corp. of London, sailed yesterday for England.

Mr. Godal tendered a farewell dinner and dance to a number of his friends at the Astor several evenings ago. In the party were Marjorie Rambeau, Evelyn Greeley, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Terriss and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Apfel, John Emerson and Anita Loos, Sidney Garrett, Arthur Butler Graham, Frederick Newman and a number of others.

Godal was called upon by Ricord Gradwell for a few words and was described by Gradwell as one of the best "American-Englishman" that he had ever met. In response Mr. Godal said that he appreciated the many compliments that had been paid him but that he considered the "American-Englishman" was perhaps the finest tribute of all.

Before sailing Godal said that his plans were so indefinite he preferred to make no statement at this time. It is known, however, that he has several important deals under consideration.

Theaters to Seat 45,000

Being Planned By Famous Players in Canada—Project Involves $10,000,000

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Montreal, Can.—The Royal Securities Corp. has announced the theater building plans of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., Famous Players' Canadian corporation.

The project involves the spending of a sum reaching $10,000,000 and the operation of theaters by Famous-Lasky with a seating capacity of 45,000. The statement adds that the company now operates 20 theaters and that six are planned for Toronto, two for Vancouver and new ones for Montreal, Quebec, Vancouver, Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Halifax and St. John.

By the autumn of 1920 it is expected that the company's theaters will seat 30,000 people and by the spring of 1921, 45,000 people.

WID'S DAILY a few days published a dispatch from Toronto relative to Famous' building activities in Canada which placed the sum to be invested at $6,000,000.

The local offices of the company had no comment to make on the above dispatch.

Denies Injunction, Then Rescinds It

Judge Knox in the Federal Court yesterday denied an injunction restraining Foundation Film Corp. from further exhibiting "The Blindness of Youth." The action was sought by National Picture Theaters.

Later in the day it developed that the judge acted on the papers already filed with him and that National had until the close of court yesterday in which to file additional papers.

The judge then rescinded his decision pending the examination of the new evidence.

He was formerly president of Realart, which he organized, and previous to this was with Select and previously with Paramount for which he organized the Western territory.

The Kane corporation was filed seeral days ago at Albany, and he has an active capital of $5,000.

Claims First Blood for Price

B. P. DeWitt, counsel for C. B. Price Co., Inc., denies that an injunction against the Celebrated Players Film Corp., the Mitchell Mark Realty Co., and the Aywor Film Corp., restraining them from exhibiting "The Log of the U-35," has been denied by Justice Finch.

DeWitt states that Justice Finch's decision in this matter is that he will grant an injunction against the further exhibition by the above mentioned concerns to-day unless the said concerns deposit a bond sufficient to protect C. B. Price Co., Inc from determined losses when the case comes to final trial. Therefore, he says, C. B. Price Co., Inc have won the first claim in this case.

License Fees Jump

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Minneapolis—The Rudsill ordinance imposing increased license fees will not come up before the City Council until the second week of February.

It is not believed possible for the theater men here to forestall an increase in fees but they are making every effort to have the ordinance changed to zone off the various districts and compel the larger theaters in the loop districts to bear the brunt of the increase.

Exhibitors do not hope to retain the older ordinance and increased licenses fees are deemed inevitable.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Preceded by a newspaper teaser campaign, and tie-ups with three large department stores which offered attractive window displays advertising the book from which "The Westerners" has been adapted, and incidentally showing one of the stills, the film played to big business at the Unique. E. Rosen manages the house.

Livenia, N. Y.—The population of this town is 836 and when 800 paid to see Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum" at the Pictureland, manager I. N. Trescott, established a percentage record. Circulars advertising the production judiciously were distributed and reached every household in town. The film ran for two days.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Cut-outs always figure in the exploitation of pictures that are presented at the Strand, Manager Edwin O. Weinberg employing several artists to prepare these lobby displays. "Heart O' the Hills," the Mary Pickford production was put over with the aid of a lobby display consisting of a large figure of the star sliding down a coal-chute and then astride a donkey.

Pittsburg, Pa.—No exploitation except additional newspaper space was used by the management of the Columbia to put over "A Day's Pleasure," Charlie Chaplin's latest. Only five reels in all were presented, the shortness of the program (there was no longer feature) making it possible to get in another performance each day. The usual scale of prices was maintained and due to the added performances, a new attendance record was established.

Muncie, Ind.—A stunt similar to that tried elsewhere with success was employed by the management of the Wysor Grand, to put over Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl." A contest, open to readers of the Muncie Press was held, offering a gold watch to the man who wrote the best essay on how to spend $10,000 so as to bring the greatest amount of happiness and betterment in Muncie, and a gold bracelet to the woman submitting the best answer. It was called "The Regular Girl Contest."

Binghamton, N. Y.—W. A. Gillen, who is to manage the New Strand, which will open late in February, tried a new scheme to determine which productions were most suitable for his house. Accompanied by stage director, orchestra leader and four other people, called impressionists, he visited first run houses up state and viewed different features. Each of the men considered each picture from his particular end, two of the "impressionists" watching the audience and the other two just expressing their personal opinions. By this system, Gillen has been able to determine to his satisfaction the advisability of booking different attractions.

Toledo—Something new in "prologues" is being hatched for the run of "Mystery of the Yellow Room" in this town. Or is it a prologue? At any rate it comes at the end of the next-to-last reel of the picture, which appears to "break," whereupon a purple light is thrown on the stage and a man in a yellow mask appears telling the audience that the film did not break, but the management wishes to give the audience a minute or two to concentrate on their decision as to who is the guilty person.

The man explains that the next reel will show who was but he believes many spectators will like to settle in their own minds, before the last reel's revelations, just who is who.

And he teases the "guessers" that they will each and all be fooled. Closes with the request that after they do witness the final reel they will not discuss the ending of the picture with their friends, in order that latter may enjoy the same suspense present audience does.

Bert Adler, exploitation manager of Realart specials, framed the stunt with the management of the Colonial. The "don't discuss" warning is also given on a slide at the finish of the final reel, and the desired result of course is that the spectators will talk.

In the Courts

The Trocadero Amusement Co., Inc. was sued in the Supreme Court for $5,110 by Hyman Sonn and others, owners of the property at the northwest corner of 115th St. and 8th Ave., for alleged neglect.

An attachment for $17,257 has been granted in the Supreme Court against the property for the Societe Francaise Des Films et Cinamatagraphes Eclair of Paris in a suit by Emi Offerman. The plaintiff alleges that he was engaged in 1909 as American representative for the defendant corporation at $100 a month salary and 20 per cent of the annual profits. He was employed until Jan. 17, 1914, during which time he established the studio of the defendant at Fort Lee and then became connected with a corporation organized to take over the defendant's interests. He alleges that his share of the profit for 1913 was $19,897, of which $17,257 is unpaid.

Carlyle Blackwell has been sued in the Supreme Court by William Harris, Jr., Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer, as owners of the play, "East Is West," for an injunction restraining him from exhibiting his play with the title, "East or West," on the ground that such a title will deceive the public and induce the belief that the film play is the plaintiff's play. The plaintiffs say they are negotiating for the production rights of their play in London and the Orient, and that they have not disposed of the film rights.

Lee Shubert made an affidavit in behalf of the plaintiffs in which he says the use by Blackwell of the title he had chosen "would deceive the public into the belief that it is he plaintiff's play and the production and motion picture rights of their play would become practically worthless if the photoplay is continued to be presented."

Albany, N. Y.—Justice Rudd of the Supreme Court has granted a writ of mandamus compelling Fred P. Elliott as majority stockholder of the Clinton Square Amusement Co. to present the books and papers of the corporation for inspection. It is contended that the minority stockholders have the right to see the books and papers, and declare that their interests in the company will be placed in jeopardy if they are not given that right.

Old Times

Milton H. Fahrney was working in those good old days for Dave Horsley. He was hero, director, cameramen and also scenic artist. All for $60 a week.

And in those days directors were getting $60 a week—the bosses drew $30.

Neilan Kicks

At Practice of Injecting Advertising in Features—Wants Directors to Stop It

Marshall Neilan has issued a "call" to all motion picture producers and directors to attack the practice of injecting advertising in films and collecting at both ends, namely from the exhibitor and the national advertiser. "The time has come," says Neilan, "when producers must realize that the practice of injecting advertising in entertainment film is a dangerous proceeding, not only for the industry in general, but for them individually.

"I know of specific cases where pictures have been practically paid for in advance by national advertisers after which rentals were demanded and obtained from exhibitors for the privilege of making good the producer's arrangement with the advertiser. It behooves the individual director to stand firm on this matter, for its continuance means the prostitution of his own best efforts.

"Exhibitors have become 'wise' and the producers who do not realize this are only inviting trouble for themselves. For many months I have been watching this practice of 'cutting down the overhead' on a production on the part of various prominent producers. It was quite evident that this could not continue. Those producers became bolder with each succeeding picture and in one particular case, it is generally understood that the cost of production on a well known film was covered by advertisers before the print reached the exhibitor.

"In a number of instances, advertising has unavoidably crept into a picture. Producers must watch this with greater care than ever for if they let such advertising pass unnoticed it will place them in the same class with the grasping ones woh cannot make money fast enough through legitimate means.

"It is gratifying to note that the exhibitors everywhere are denouncing this practice. They must do this in order to protect themselves. Advertising on the screen, to a limited extent, is very often good business for the exhibitor. However, it should work out this way and not merely present good business for the producer at the expense of the exhibitor. The exhibitor should be the sole judge as to how much and how little advertising is to appear on his screen."

Sales Convention

of Famous Players on—Zukor and Lasky Make Addresses

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Chicago—The representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corp., in conveition now in session at the La Salle Hotel, are busily working on plans for a new system of distribution and exploitation of their pictures.

The convention, which is presided over by Al Lichtman, general managed was called by the executives of the corporation for the purpose of bringing together for the first time the executives and all the district and branch managers, as well as the exploitation men of the organization. All of the 28 exchanges of Famous Players are represented, with a large delegation from the executive offices in New York.

As a result of the work of the convention, it is announced that the same degree of specialization in force in the manufacture of pictures will be carried through every branch of the distribution and exploitation departments.

Every production made by Famous Players-Lasky will hereafter be exploited as an individual production.

"We will first sell the pictures to the exhibitor," said Mr. Lichtman. Then we must sell the picture to the public for the benefit of the exhibitor. This calls for the organization of a corps of film specialists. Every production will receive its own special exploitation just as though it were a road show."

There is to be one exploitation man at each of the 28 exchanges, according to the plans perfected at the convention. These men will work under the direction of the home office and in co-operation with the district and branch managers.

The home office staff will create for each production the best plan of exploitation for selling that picture to the public. The various exploitation men will carry out these plans.

The convention will continue through to-day. Adolph Zukor and Vice-President Jesse L. Lasky addressed the convention yesterday.

Walter McGrail under contract to Selznick, is in Los Angeles to play the leading role in "Blind Youth." have associated themselves in the new enterprise is indicated in the following list of franchise holders: Lubliner & Trinz, Chicago; Ruben & Finkelstein, Minneapolis; The Capitol, Boston (to be built); Harris & Ackerman, Los Angeles; H. Cornwell, St. Louis; Harris & Ackerman, San Francisco; Harris & Libson, Pittsburg and Cincinnati; Paul Gustanovich, Cleveland; J. H. Cooper, Oklahoma City; Harry Crandall, Washington; Samuel Harding, Kansas City; Bishop Cass Investment Co., Denver; Harding & Cohen, Omaha; J. Q. Clemmer, Seattle; Olsen & Sourbier, Indianapolis; Harris & Libson, Detroit; H. H. Wellenbrick, Newark; Michael Shea, Buffalo; Merrill Theater Amusement Co., Milwaukee; Clemmer & Lambach, Spokane; Samuel Harris, Little Rock, and Clemmer & Lambach, Portland.

The organization plans to deal in every phase of the picture industry, produce, distribute, buy and build theaters if found necessary.

The new organization is backed by an unlimited amount of capital. The financial interests back of the theater circuits represent many millions of dollars and before the step was taken it is stated they had the practical assurance of the co-operation of more than 8,000 other theater owners who will join with them in the purchase and distribution of motion pictures. It is frankly opposed to the interests endeavoring to secure a monopoly on theaters as well as on the making of motion pictures.

In New York City the franchise goes to the Capitol. This means that the productions taken over by the organization will have their premiere in New York at the Capitol.

The Associated Exhibitors is completely an exhibitor's organization, according to the first announcement. In each territory the franchise holder will sell subsidiary franchises for the territory. Each exhibitor will be protected from competition in the showing of the organization's productions for he will have the exclusive rights in his territory.

Every exhibitor will be assured of productions of the highest class. A purchasing committee made up of exhibitors will pass on all productions before they are bought for distribution.

The purpose of the Association is to bring the producer, star, director and independent seller of big state's rights features into direct contact with the exhibitor.

The Associated Exhibitors has selected the Pathe Exchange to handle their product.

An amusing mistake occurred in filming Booth Tarkington's Edgar stories when "Iris," colored cook, took the wrong cue. "Iris In," called Director Hopper to the Cameramman. Mystery As to Who Is Buying Theaters in Seattle

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Seattle—Several mysterious purchases of theaters have been made in Seattle recently. It is known that John Hamrick has sold his Rex, which is the smallest first run theater in Seattle, but at the same time one of the most successful. Hamrick has not announced the purchaser.

The two other houses involved are the Majestic of Ballard, belonging to H. W. Bruen and the property and plans of another house he was intending to build immediately in the University district. Harry Sigmond, acted for the purchasers. He will not disclose the name of the purchaser.

It is thought that the buyer in both these instances is the same as the buyer of the Strand property, the Jensen and Von Herberg house on 2d Ave. Mike Rosenberg and his associates are known to be the buyers in this instance, but it is not known just who Rosenberg's associates are.

Maloy closed the theaters at 6 o'clock after Hewins had refused to pay an increase in wages to Smith King, operator in the Terrace garden of the Morrison hotel, also operated by Moir and to arrange for another operator.

Latter Definitely Out of First National—$3,000,000 Theater Planned

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Sol Lesser, in conjunction with Gore Bros. of Los Angeles has purchased outright the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Southern California and Arizona from T. L. Tally.

The deal means that Tally who was vice-president of the Circuit is now definitely out of the Circuit's affairs. By the terms of the deal which is said to involve about $1,000,000 the Kinema theater in Los Angeles goes to Lesser and the Gore Bros.

One of the first moves of the Lesser-Gore tie-up will be the erection of a $3,000,000 theater in Los Angeles. The theater will probably be erected on Broadway and selection of a site will probably be completed in a few days.

Gore Bros. control 15 theaters on the coast. They own the Playhouse, Alhambra, Burbank, Optic, Regent, Lyceum, Grand and Liberty here. The Sunshine theater in San Diego is also theirs while other holdings include theaters in Portland, Seattle and San Francisco.

Lesser is reported as having cleared over $250,000 on his successfull exploitation of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," with the Sennett Bathing Girls. He has been mainly identified with the state righting of such big specials as "The Spoilers" and "Hearts of the World." No one connected with the local Sol Lesser offices cared to comment on the above dispatch.

WID'S DAILY indicated, at the time of the Atlantic City convention of First National that there was considerable importance attached to the fact that T. L. Tally was not named as one of the directors of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

An interesting angle was developed on the deal when at First National it was stated that when a franchise holder decides to sell out, the purchaser must be approved by the total membership of the circuit before the new arrangement can be considered binding upon the Circuit as a body. First National is so constituted, it was declared that should a purchaser not be approved, the Circuit will itself take over the franchise for that particular territory and conduct its own distributing in that territory.

Red Cross to Release

Organization Now Listing Non-Theatrical Exhibitors—Seeking Industrials to Handle

The American Red Cross is now engaged in compiling a list of the non-theatrical exhibitors in the United States. This is being done through the organization's 13 divisional offices which are in turn receiving reports from 3,697 chapters, embracing over 16,000 auxiliaries.

These reports will cover churches, clubs, schools and institutions of such character which are not concerned with the exhibition of motion pictures as a commercial proposition.

Apparently the Red Cross is seeking to develop a regular tie-up with producers of industrials to cater to the non-theatrical field exclusively for a statement issued by the organization says that besides the showings of the Red Cross' own films, correspondence with makers of industrials is being sought.

The Red Cross is now exhibiting pictures to over 3,000,000 people monthly through its chapters and offices.

Can Exploit Product in Films, Says Los Angeles Firm—Abrams Issues Denial

The Cinema-Ad., Inc., a Los Angeles Company is sending the following letter broadcast to advertising managers of companies that conduct a national advertising campaign:

"We can offer you twenty million circulation (more than all the magazines combined)—at the Saturday Evening Post rates:—as we have contracted with a few of the greatest producers and stars (like Griffith, Fairbanks, and others of like magnitude) to insert your ad in their coming productions.

"Our agreement being confidential with the producers, we cannot give you their names until you are positively interested.

"Therefore, we will ask you to kindly advise us by return mail if you wish to make any arrangement for the coming year, as it was a hard task for us to induce the producers and stars to accept and insert advertisements into their legitimate plays and we control but a limited number of productions.

"Respectfully yours,

Judge Knox's action does not finally dispose of the case as it has still to come to trial. However, by the decision National cannot interfere with the exhibition of "The Blindness of Youth," pending the trial of the action which will probably be brought up within a few months.

"Don't Fear Combine"

"All you have got to do is to watch your step and push your pictures. You are in a good, solid, substantial industry. It is just as firm a business as any other industry. The business has no more of the diseases of childhood than any other industry has had.

"You have not begun to scratch the surface of your possibilities. New fields will develop as the industry grows, that will give you even greater opportunities for expansion than you have known.

"No need to worry about the combination of other interests. The same thing occurred when United States Steel was organized. There were plenty of imitators but none of them got very far. United States Steel is all right because its foundation was secure and sensible; so Famous Players-Lasky is all right because its foundation is safe, sane and secure."

Lasky outlined an ambitious program of production. He said that arrangements have been completed with a number of writers, and through theater organizations, by which the producing department of Famous Players will receive the benefit of their entire output. From the Frohman interests, the output of J. M. Barrie is assured, George Broadhurst's output will also be filmed as well as the works of John D. Williams, Oliver Morosco Productions, Max Marcin, Salisbury Field and others.

Speaking of directors, Lasky said that the services of Cecil B. DeMille, George Fitzmaurice, William DeMille, George Melford and William D. Taylor are assured for a number of years. Hugh Ford is also included. They will make 20 special productions in the year.

Lasky said that the production department has also developed the idea of a stock company which will enable the producers to put on films with an all-star cast.

Inauguration of a completely new plan of exploitation and distribution of Paramount Artcraft pictures was brought about by this convention. The plan is, in a nutshell, to give the exhibitor the maximum of financial returns on every picture of that brand that he shows. Each picture will stand absolutely and solely on its own merits, without relationship to any other picture.

The adoption of this plan will bring about the complete reorganization of the exploitation and sales departments, to meet the new conditions.

The first step will be to double the number of the existing force and train the new men to carry out the work in the field. Each exchange headquarters will have assigned to its territory one or more of these trained exploitation men whose services will be given direct to the exhibitor.

It was announced during the convention that the finance committee and the executives are completing a profit sharing program, the details of which will be announced within a short time. The committee has been at work on this plan for several months.

The convention closed with a banquet and smoker, with vaudeville entertainment at the La Salle Hotel Friday night.

Eh, What?

Says Samuel E. Morris, Vice-President and General Manager of Select Pictures:

"Within the space of ten years from an insecure and inconspicuous position amongst the industries of the world, motion pictures have leaped with Brobidiganian's strides, until to-day it is securely established as the fifth largest industry in the world."

50 Millions in Pictures

Values Placed on Productions Made in Los Angeles Yearly

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—The Evening Herald says editorially:

"The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has just issued some startling figures regarding the magnitude of the motion picture industry of this city.

"According to it, 80 per cent of all the screen plays photographed in this country are made here.

"Fifty millions of dollars is the estimate placed on the value of the films produced in this city in a year.

"That is approximately equal to the entire value of the orange crop of Southern California.

"The 40 plants in which the pictures are made are valued at $12,265,000, and the payrolls show an employment of more than 10,000 persons who earn more than $20,000,000 annually.

"This is an industry that any city may envy. Who knows of another business centered in any American city that represents a combination of so much capital invested in so valuable an output?

"Los Angeles has too many attractions to have her reputation depend upon one, but no other of its features is more valuable as a source of publicity than the output of her motion picture studios."

Squabble Continues

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

London, Eng.—The controversy between Stoll Film Co., Ltd. and Goldwyn over the cancellation of the latter's contract with Stoll continues here.

Goldwyn is printing advertisements in the trade press asking the British exhibitor not to judge the company by the statements issued by Stoll. The latter in turn is managing to have published advertisements on the opposite page signed by Jeffert Bernard in which Stoll's position is maintained despite Goldwyn's assertions.

In the Courts

The Fortuol Film Corp. has been sued in the Supreme Court by M. de Miguel & Co., of Barcelona, Spain, for $20,000 damages. The complaint alleges that in August last the defendants delivered an invoice purporting to cover a shipment of films, reciting that the defendant had shipped three Blue Ribbon pictures, "Don Caesar de Bazan," "The Bait," and "The Flying Twins." When the shipment was opened in Spain it was found to contain "old and damaged films of no value and not the Blue Ribbon films which are of great value." The plaintiff in reliance of defendant's alleged false representation paid $9,948 for the films and claims to have been damaged in the sum sued for.

Supreme Court Justice Giegerich has granted a rehearing in the suit of Darcy & Wolford, Inc., as owner of the play, "The Tidal Wave," for an injunction restraining William Stoermer from taking that name for a film play. Justice Giegerich had dismissed the complaint on the ground that if the Stoermer play showed a tidal wave the defendant was justified in using a title which would be descriptive of the play. In granting the rehearing Justice Giegerich said it had been urged that under his decision there would be no protection for such titles as "The Girl of the Golden West," "The Gold Diggers," 'Son-Daughter," or "One Night in Rome." The court said that all he meant to say was "the use of words properly descriptive of things or the actual names of things should not be barred to persons who desire to make and exhibit pictures of such things."

Sunday Closing and Censorship

Censorship for New York?

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Albany, N. Y.—A motion picture censorship bill backed by some of the reform interests of the State will be introduced in the Legislature shortly. The provisions calling principally for censorship under the direction of the state board of regents, will be similar to those in a bill of last year, which failed to pass in the Senate. Last year's bill was sponsored by Assemblyman John W. Slacer of Buffalo.

Whether there will be other bills introduced providing for state censorship of the movies, will depend largely on the decision of the committee of the state mayors' conference which is now investigating the necessity of such legislation. There will be a hearing on the subject in Albany in February before reporting to the State Conference of Mayors which will be also held in Albany late in February.

Charles Ray is the first big asset of the newly formed Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corp. By the arrangement all the pictures of this star will be presented by the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corp. for First National release. Through a deal made a year ago, the distribution of the Charles Ray pictures following the completion of his contract with Thos. H. Tucker Case Argued

Judge Platzek Reserves Decision—Some of the Points Presented

Judge Platzek in the Supreme Court, Part I, yesterday heard the argument in the George Loane Tucker suit against Mayflower Photoplay Corp. and Famous Players-Lasky Corp. for the granting of a temporary injunction to restrain Famous Players-Lasky from distributing "The Miracle Man" further except in exact compliance with the terms of the contract for the distribution of that production and for a temporary injunction against the Mayflower Photoplay Corp. to keep them from interfering with him in the completion of his second production, "Ladies Must Live," and for a temporary injunction against both of the defendants to keep them from interfering with him in securing other employment.

Isaac Malevinsky, of O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll, for Mr. Tucker, stated that he found in the affidavits submitted by Mr. Flinn of Famous Players that Mr. Flinn admitted the obligation due Mr. Tucker whereas Mr. Wolper of the Mayflower Photoplay Corp. denied the obligation to Mr. Tucker claiming that although the contract provided that George Loane Tucker should be advertised that it was only for the benefit of Mayflower and not for the benefit of George Loane Tucker.

Alfred Beekman, representing Mayflower, cited an abrogation contract signed by Mr. Tucker upon the occasion of the drafting of a new contract between Mayflower and Tucker which was effective June 9, this abrogation contract being for the purpose of abrogating the previous Mayflower-Tucker agreements. In answering this claim Mr. Malevinsky for Mr. Tucker, presented the argument that this abrogation contract had no relation whatever to the distribution contract since all of Mr. Tucker's contracts with Mayflower were made in compliance with the distribution contract of Famous Players-Lasky thereby protecting Mr Tucker as to his exploitation rights provided for in the distribution contract.

E. N. Zoline, representing Famous Players-Lasky, presented the technical point that because the Mayflower-Famous Players-Lasky contract was made under the seal of the respective corporations Mr. Tucker could not be a third party thereto, also arguing that there was no consideration for Famous Players-Lasky granting any rights to Mr. Tucker. Mr. Malevinsky in rebuttal set forth various cases justifying his contention regarding the legal status of the case and presented a very large mass of evidence together with lengthy replying affidavits for the consideration of the court whereupon Judge Platzek took the case under advisement reserving decision as to the temporary injunction until he might have time to examine the voluminous papers.

Tucker Case Argued

The defendants did not present any exhibits relative to advertising.

In explaining the manner in which the voluminous exhibits of the plaintiff had been arranged, Mr. Malevinsky pointed out that because Famous Players-Lasky had distributed newspaper cuts, stories and other exhibition matter, omitting Mr. Tucker's name, these pieces of publicity had been printed many millions of times in the past few months. Several thousand clippings of individual instances of publication, one from each paper, were presented to the court together with samples of lithographs that did not contain Mr. Tucker's name, with a letter stating that 295,000 of these had been purchased by Famous Players from the National Printing and Engraving Co. It was also stated in the papers that a tremendous quantity of lithographs not bearing Mr. Tucker's name were purchased from the Morgan Lithograph Co. by the Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

It is just as easy to paste up one kind of a poster as another. The only disadvantage that comes with the use of RITCHEY posters lies in the fact that it takes longer to count the resultant box-office receipts.

Maryland Exhibitors Not in Favor of That Kind of Bookings

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Baltimore, Md.—The Exhibitors League of Maryland, at an annual meeting just held passed a resolution requesting exhibitors not to book on a percentage basis on the ground that producers will know what business the exhibitor does and thus go to an opposition theater with their productions if necessary.

Sam Berman of the New York Exhibitors League addressed the meeting on screen advertising. The Maryland body is now sending a form letter to all its members advising them not to sign for industrial reels unless paid for it or the Ford Weekly, distributed by Goldwyn.

A list of exhibitors was forwarded to the Governor from which one will be selected to act on the Censor Board. The Governor before his election promised to appoint an exhibitor if elected.

The following officers were re-elected: E. B. McCurdy, president; Thos. D. Goldberg, vice-president; William E. Stumpf, secretary; Louis Rome, treasurer and Morris A. Rome, attorney. Pools Serial Makers

Burston Lines Up Four Other Producers—Plans Minimum of Waste in Manufacturing

Louis Burston, producer of "The Hawk's Trail," a serial with King Baggott, says he has perfected a pooling of interests with four independent serial producers with a potential combined output to state right buyers 52 weeks a year.

The names of his associates are being kept secret at this time. The idea in back of the move, however, will result in a minimum of production waste and an interchange of ideas so as to avoid repetition in story materials.

Burston planned coming east, but he is confined to his home in California. He will be in New York in about three weeks.

Industry Not in Census

No figures relative to the motion picture industry will appear in the Census now being taken by the Government.

This developed yesterday in news from Washington.

The fact that the Government will not include any figures relative to either production or picture theaters, amount expended or numbers involved, will prove a tremendous disappointment to a number of executives who had reason to believe that figures relative to the industry would appear in the Census of 1920. The reason given is that the industry "is not a manufacturing industry in the sense of the word as included in the law."

Fox Moving

Practically in New Quarters Next Week—Exchange to Remain on 46th Street.

The William Fox organization by next Monday will, for all practical purposes, be located in the studio building on 55th street and 10th avenue. The exchange will continue in the 46th street building, however. Many of the departments have already moved and others are being moved daily.

The grand housewarming will take place next May, when the laboratory will be completed. At that time all important Fox officials will be on hand.

"Winnie" Sheehan leaves next month for Europe, but will return in time for the celebration.

Arthur James will make several short trips and may go to England in March, but this is unlikely, because he would be on the other side only a month and his plans call for a longer stay abroad.

Robert Andersen, of Universal, returned to America aboard the Mauretania on Tuesday.

Abrams Explains

Tells of Securing Minneapolis Auditorium for "Big Four" Product—Row With Ruben & Finkelstein

Hiram Abrams, general manager of United Artists, explained yesterday the split between his organization and Ruben and Finkelstein, of Minneapolis.

Abrams stated that "Pollyanna" had been booked for Minneapolis by R. and F. The latter endeavored to secure the film for Duluth, where United Artists had previously closed a contract. R. and F., stated Abrams, wanted to secure the film for Duluth because they "wanted to run a competitor out of business."

United Artists refused to accede to R. and F.'s demand, with the result that the latter threatened to break the Minneapolis contract. Abrams advised them to go ahead.

An arrangement was then perfected between E. L. Carpenter and H. C. Clark, owners of the Minneapolis Auditorium whereby the "Big Four" product will be shown in that theatre, formerly occupied by the Symphony Orchestra. The opening date has been set for March 29 with "Pollyanna" or "When the Clouds Roll By" as the opening attraction. The opening film will run four weeks.

"We are not out after theatres," said Mr. Abrams yesterday, "but we are determined that our pictures shall be shown in every town in the United States, whether we show them in a school or a tent."

Hart Sues Ince

For $100,000—Property of Great Western Prod. Attached—Another Suit Threatened.

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles.—William S. Hart has filed suit here through his attorney, Henry Wetherhorn, against Thomas H. Ince for $100,832.44 Great Western Productions, Inc. formerly William S. Hart Productions, also named as defendant in the action. Suit was filed as an attachment suit and the property of the Great Western concern was attached. Because of this details of the suit were to be kept secret until the attachment was levied.

The action grew out of a complicated motion picture deal by which William S. Hart Productions became the Great Western Productions, with one-half its capital stock issued to Hart and one-half to Ince. The deal was to be consummated, it was alleged on condition that Ince would assign to the corporation his interest in the contract with Artcraft Pictures Corp., by which the productions were to be released and distributed. A contract was involved by which Hart was to receive $1,000 a week in salary, and a large additional sum weekly on account of guaranteed profits or dividends. The complaint then recited that Hart accepted employment on these terms with the Great Western Company and 16 pictures were completed between July, 1917, and July, 1919. Hart alleged the profits or dividends of the Great Western exceeded one-third the total gross receipts by $201,664.88. Under the terms of the contract Hart alleged he was entitled to one-half this sum. Great Western Productions, according to the complaint, is acting now only in capacity of collecting receipts from the 16 productions from the Artcraft Company, its function as a producing concern having ended with the completion of the 16 pictures.

Wetherhorn states after this suit is settled another suit for $100,000 will be filed for moneys due Hart in connection with the percentage arrangements of other productions.

Ince Special at Broadway

"Dangerous Hours," a personally supervised Thomas H. Ince production directed by Fred Niblo, will be the feature at Moss' Broadway beginning to-morrow.

A Wonderful Comedy and All To Victor Schertzinger's Credit

Mabel Normand in
"PINTO"
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR.....Victor L. Schertzinger
AUTHOR.....Victor L. Schertzinger
SCENARIO BY.....Gerald C. Duffy
CAMERAMAN.....George Webber
AS A WHOLE.....Comedy-drama with the accent all on the comedy; a sure-fire entertainment, best the star has done for this company.
STORY.....Approaches burlesque at times but always registers and retains the interest.
DIRECTION.....Schertzinger certainly knows how to handle this star; has done a fine piece of work.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Very good
LIGHTINGS .....Excellent
CAMERA WORK.....Good
STAR.....Registers wonderfully well in role built specially for her; gets over some great comedy business.
SUPPORT.....All good; Cullen Landis most acceptable leading man.
EXTERIORS.....Western and fashionable eastern stuff.
INTERIORS .....Appropriate
DETAIL.....Subject is particularly well titled, many of the lines being good for comedy.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Cowgirl's experiences in the usual effete east.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

The only things the matter with many of Mabel Normand's Goldwyn pictures were story and direction. But in "Pinto" she has had them both supplied in one fell swoop by none other than Victor Schertzinger, one time director for Charles Ray. "Pinto" is a great comedy, just the right sort of story for the star and one which has been screened with due regard for her talents in the comedy line. And it is to Schertzinger's credit. He seems to be one of the few old Ince directors who, on another lot, manages to retain the sure-fire Ince method of development of plot and general smoothness of action.

Then, too, that sense of comedy which Schertzinger evinced in handling the Ray subjects is again apparent here both in the writing and the directing of "Pinto." He has not allowed himself to be hampered by any conventional comedy bounds and "Pinto" further reveals itself as a picture possessing considerable original and enriching comedy business, even though its actual frame-work is more or less of a scenario tin-type.

Pinto is a western girl who had been reared by five godfathers. She wears sombrero, chaps, uses the lariat and rides, just as if she were a regular cowboy. Then there comes the time when her godfather in New York, Pop Audrey sends for her. Pop has great wealth and a wife who is a snob and, worse than that, deceitful. Pinto is of a mind that New York is a big ranch and receives an awful shock when she gets there in company with Looey, her ancient tutor and companion.

There follows her initiation into society, her romance with Bob De Witt and her final unmasking of Mrs. Audrey's deceit before Pop. And the end finds her on her way back west with Bob and Pop as companions. Scenes that are sure-fire laugh-getters are Pinto's meeting with Pop in the course of which she reaks up Mrs. Audrey's tea, Pinto and Looey wandering around lower New York asking where Pop Audrey lives, Bob's instructions to Pinto on how to act with men during which sequence he makes love to her, and society's frantic efforts to escape when Looey, filled with red-eye shoots up a lawn party.

Miss Normand is well supported by Cullen Landis as leading man and by George Nichols as Pop Audrey. Others are Edythe Chapman, Hallam Cooley and Edward Jobson.

Give it the Limit in Advertising and Exploitation

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There isn't a single doubt but that "Pinto" is going to register and register strongly with every sort of audience. Its appeal isn't limited to any class or classes. You know how even and well running the Ray pictures were that Schertzinger made for Ince. Well, he's got the same wonderful smoothness into this feature, and what with the good stuff he has put into the story in the way of comedy, he's succeeded in making a wonderfully fine picture.

Give it the limit in advertising and exploitation. The business you do on it should only be confined to the capacity of your house. Advertise it to the kids, advertise it to the old folks that like a good comedy. Play it up in every conceivable fashion for it's going to "get" any and all audiences and you won't have the smallest kick after it's all over.

Big Sympathetic Appeal and Thrilling Climax in Story of Circus Life

Shirley Mason in
"HER ELEPHANT MAN"
Fox

DIRECTOR ..... Scott Dunlap
AUTHOR ..... Pearl Doles Bell
SCENARIO BY .....Isabelle Johnson
CAMERAMAN .....Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Picture dealing with circus life containing big sympathetic appeal in central character and building to thrilling climax.
STORY....Simple and obvious but well handled plot that always retains the interest through situations and characterizations.
DIRECTION.....Has developed an excellent circus atmosphere; climax when tents are destroyed in rain and wind excellently handled.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Plain and suitable
CAMERA WORK .....Effective shots particularly in climax sequence.
STAR.....Better than ever before; registers delightfully in sympathetic role.
SUPPORT.....Two principal assisting roles well acted by Albert Roscoe and Harry Todd.
EXTERIORS.....Scenes about the big-top full of real circus atmosphere.
INTERIORS ..... Ditto
DETAIL.....Some minor details of direction rather obvious but generally an air of realism pervades entire picture.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Romance of circus girl and her "Elephant Man," an unhappily married Englishman.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

With "Her Elephant Man," William Fox has introduced an element rather original in his series of productions, for it departs altogether from any suggestion of sex or sensationalism and reveals itself as a wonderfully sympathetic story of the circus containing an atmosphere as realistic as an habitue of the big top itself could require. It is by all odds the best picture that Fox has turned out within average memory and contains an appeal that refuses to confine itself to any particular type of audience.

The plot itself is extremely simple and almost as obvious once it comes to its essentials, but throughout the interest is exceptionally well maintained because of the fine acting of the star, Shirley Mason, in a role that is sympathetic at least, and the admirable circus atmosphere with which Director Scott Dunlap has endowed the production.

The story opens in Africa where Joan, a young girl, is left with only the blacks as friends and companions when her father, a missionary, dies. She is found among the natives by Jerimy, a circus man on an animal hunt and Philip Dorset, an Englishman who discovered that his wife only cared for his money and had left her immediately after marriage. Jerimy takes Joan back to the circus and Dorset goes along as elephant man for the show.

As time goes on and Joan outgrows short dresses her love for Dorset deepens into something beyond mere childish affection. And Philip thinking of the barrier between them finally leaves the show. Blake, the heavy, tries by various means to blacken Dorset's reputation in Joan's eyes and ultimately succeeds when he tells her of the marriage. But that very night Dorset returns with the news that his wife has divorced him. A terrific hurricane and rainstorm fairly sweeps the big tents from the ground and, of course, it proves the reunion of the lovers.

The storm with the attendant commotion caused among the audience, the circus folk and the animals form a thrilling sequence. The scenes are excellently arranged with judiciously placed big shots and close-ups so that the utmost in suspense has been derived.

Albert Roscoe as Dorset and Harry Todd as Jerimy handle the principal supporting roles very well while others are Henry Herbert, Ardito Mellonino and Dorothy Lee.

Bill It Like a Circus and Business Ought to Be Big

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You know what circus day means! It means the turning out of young and old alike to see that "greatest show on earth" or whatever it's called. And "Her Elephant Man" contains most of that appeal of the real old circus with a real human story to back up the wealth of atmosphere with which it is endowed. It stands to reason then that you ought to clean up on it if you bill it and exploit it in the right manner.

Of course, there is no end to the exploitation stunts that can be applied to the advertising of a circus story. Where to stop is only a question of money. But it may be remarked here that "Her Elephant Man" surely is going to satisfy most everyone that comes to your theater. Figure out what your maximum business comes to and then make your advertising appropriation accordingly. Certainly you can't go wrong in playing "Her Elephant Man" and making a big noise about it.

Dramatic and Impressive Picturization of Famous Novel

Bert Lytell in
"THE RIGHT OF WAY"
Screen Classics—Metro

DIRECTOR .....Jack Dillon
AUTHOR.....Sir Gilbert Parker
SCENARIO BY.....June Mathis
CAMERAMAN.....Robert B. Kurrle
AS A WHOLE.....Highly appropriate picturization of famous novel; should score heavily particularly with better class audiences.
STORY.....Holds the interest all the way and contains a number of intense dramatic crises.
DIRECTION.....Has handled various sequences realistically.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Generally very good
LIGHTINGS .....Very good
CAMERA WORK.....Good shots
STAR.....Gives carefully studied and impressive characterization of difficult part.
SUPPORT.....Very good; Gibson Gowland stands out in very important role.
EXTERIORS.....Good French-Canadian village stuff for the most part.
INTERIORS .....All appropriate
DETAIL.....Everything carefully attended to
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Awakening of agnostic through contact with lives of simple and trusting people.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,800 feet

Here is a picture that is going to make a big impression on most everyone that sees it, probably scoring more heavily with the better class audiences because of the more or less improved nature of its theme. But while it contains not a little penetration into the psychology of important character's mind, there is enough thrilling physical action throughout its lengthy footage to warrant the picture receiving universal endorsement.

It opens with a particularly fine sequence in a Montreal court where Charley Steele, the brilliant, cynical, supercillious lawyer acquits one Joe Portugais of murder when all the evidence is against him. Steele is at once the pride of Montreal's society as well as the thorn in its flesh. He is one who scoffs at God, willing to be convinced but permitting no one to convince him. In addition he is a heavy drinker.

Two years after his marriage he is drawn into a brawl in a tavern on the river's edge, knocked out and thrown in the water. Joe Portugais finds him and takes him to the village of Chaudiere where he lives. After many months an operation restores Steele's mind but a paper then informs him that he is believed dead, with the stain of embezzlement on his name, and that his wife has married again.

He secures work in a tailor shop operated by a religious fanatic who is near crazed when Steele professes his doubt of God to him. That night he sears his chest with a burning cross. But it is the love of Rosalie, the rose of Chaudiere, that brings Steele to a better understanding of something infinite. His old superciliousness drops from him and he lives for a time untroubled save by the thought of his wife in Montreal. Then one night while protecting the funds of the church from thieves he is mortally wounded and died in the arms of the Cure. Before the simple villagers he has redeemed himself for his words of doubt.

The story maintains an admirable thread of interest throughout and is sustained often enough by dramatic crises of real power, namely Steele's argument in the court room, his fight in the tavern, the act of the fanatic in burning his chest with the cross and the final redemption of Steele in his fight to save the funds of the church.

Bert Lytell gives a carefully studied and impressive characterization of the difficult role of Steele. He brings out the arrogance and superciliousness of the man wonderfully well.

A Wonderful Buy for Exploitation as Well as Entertainment

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Right of Way" is a well known title for the reason that the novel by Sir Gilbert Parker had a wonderful sale. You ought to be able to get an unusual amount of publicity from it because editors and other influential folk can be interested in the production. Then there is Bert Lytell, a rapidly rising star. Title, author and star should create a real box office card for all better class houses.

The producers are sending the picture out with two endings. One as related above, the other concluding happily with the understanding that Steele and Rosalie finally marry. The exhibitor may chose which to use. Here again is a chance for additional publicity. Both endings might be utilized and a contest inaugurated as to which is the most fitting. All in all from the exploitation angle you have a wonderful buy here.

100% HIGH!

"One hundred per cent high, and gripping throughout," says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. "Interwoven in a subtle plot of strong dramatic force, it carries the acutest thrills of intrepid, death-defying dare-devilism."

"Here is a drama you must see in order to realize," declares the Los Angeles Record. See it today—it will astound you, and you'll realize here's your great opportunity to cash in.

Hayakawa in a Comedy-Drama that Gets Over Very Well

Sessue Hayakawa in
"THE BEGGAR PRINCE"
Haworth—Robertson-Cole

DIRECTOR ..... William Worthington
AUTHOR ..... E. Richard Schayer
SCENARIO BY ..... E. Richard Schayer
CAMERAMAN ..... Frank D. Williams
AS A WHOLE..Unusual comedy-drama that should register satisfactorily and appeal to more people than most Hayakawa subjects.
STORY.....Takes place on a mythical island and this time star doesn't have to sacrifice himself for white man or woman.
DIRECTION.....Has registered the comedy and the serious scenes with equal satisfaction.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Very effective
CAMERA WORK ..... Most satisfactory
STAR.....Appears in dual role and gives highly effective performances.
SUPPORT.....Types are all mixed up but ability is commendable.
EXTERIORS ..... Good island stuff
INTERIORS .....Some realistic scenes representing palace of prince.
DETAIL.....Varying types of players rather confusing but then the locale is mythical.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Fisherman changes places with vain prince and sets both the government and the prince aright.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,100 feet

An unusual comedy-drama, very artistically mounted is presented in "The Beggar Prince," Sessue Hayakawa's latest production. It is quite different from the majority of this star's pictures for the reason that the locale of the story and the "race" that is dealt with are mythical and that the star is not called upon to pull any sacrifice stunt to bring lovers together.

Hayakawa appears as a prince of a mythical island, who is being buncoed by his courtiers into believing that he commands the tides of the sea and the eclipses of the sun and moon, while they collect enormous taxes from the people. Niki, a fisherman, is also played by Hayakawa. The prince sets eyes on Niki's girl and insists on having her for a slave. Niki, good and mad, follows her and her captors to the palace, crowns the prince with a hefty wallop when no one is looking and changes places with him.

Then, of course, Niki proceeds to inaugurate a just administration on the island while in the meantime the real prince, taking Niki's place, is learning what contentment and happiness really is. In the end Niki gives back the throne to the now reformed prince and the culmination of two romances brings the picture to a happy conclusion.

There is some very good comedy registered by Niki when he first assumes the role of the prince and there are situations scattered throughout that are good for laughs. The picture has been given an exceedingly artistic production and is delightfully photographed. The subtitles use "dost" and "thou" and "goest" and are generally flowery and if they get a few titters it won't matter. And the island sure is a mythical one. There are whites and blacks and then there is Hayakawa.

The story is well supported by Thelma Percy, Beatrice La Plante, Josef Swickard, Bert Hadley and Robert Bolder.

A Departure for Hayakawa That Should Meet With General Approval

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Beggar Prince" should gain a larger circulation and meet with more general approval than most of the Hayakawa pictures inasmuch as it is a radical departure from previous subjects and has nothing in it that could possibly be interpreted as propaganda for any race. The parts played by the star could just as well have been taken by any actor but stand out conspicuously owing to the fine performances rendered by Hayakawa.

In advertising it would be well to bring out this fact by informing your public that the story takes place on a mythical island and that the star appears as both the hero and the heavy. If you can also work in the nice moral the story drives home, by all means do so but be careful not to give the impression that the picture sets out to "teach a lesson."

The picture offers a good opportunity for some sort of tropical lobby decoration if this type of exploitation is gone in for. Also bring out the fact that the subject contains many moments of comedy. Hayakawa is just as good in these sequences as he is in the serious ones and his versatility shows itself to fine advantage.

Splendid Production Qualities Obviate Shortcomings of Story

Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon in
"RESPECTABLE BY PROXY"
J. Stuart Blackton Prod.—Pathe

DIRECTOR ..... J. Stuart Blackton
AUTHOR ..... Florence Myott
SCENARIO BY .....Stanley Olmsted
CAMERAMAN ..... William S. Adams
AS A WHOLE.....Technically accurate and generally well produced; needs punch to get over its action.
STORY.....Demands little sympathy for the characters and at times entirely too obvious.
DIRECTION.....Registers some clever touches and pays considerable attention to the artistic.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Splendid
LIGHTINGS ..... Very fine
CAMERA WORK .....Many ideal shots
STARS....Perhaps the best thing they have done in some time.
SUPPORT....Eulalie Jensen convincing in her part; old negro couple afford about the most realistic bit in this film.
EXTERIORS .....Beautiful southern atmosphere
INTERIORS.....Impress by their correctness
DETAIL.....Titles might be shortened but there are no serious errors.
CHARACTER OF STORY....Fairly original twist given to a case of switched identity.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,540 feet

As in all his productions, J. Stuart Blackton lives up to his reputation for mastery over the ideals of technique and artistry. Throughout the production his special knack of registering the smallest bit in the most appealing and satisfactory way, is evidenced by not only his handling of the players but in the camera work, detail and particularly locations.

Miss Breamer and Mr. Gordon are more fortunate in having parts more adapted to their individual personalities than have been accorded them in some of their more recent productions. The supporting cast with but one exception has been well selected, Eulalie Jensen appearing to advantage as the "good bad" actress. Two negro characters afford a good deal of amusement and most of the human touches.

There are several beautiful shots representing a typical southern home which will impress for their accuracy not alone in exterior scenes but interior as well. Detail has been well taken care of and the night scenes are very good with the exception of one scene in which a painted drop is used.

Eulalie Jensen is on her way to accept an engagement with some insignificant stock company. On the train, Robert Gordon, a wealthy young southerner leaving home to escape an undesirable marriage, comes to Eulalie's assistance when she pretends to have lost her purse. The unsuspecting Robert falls for the scheming actress and inside of a week they are married.

A title says that a year has passed and Robert is reported among those drowned on a vessel bound for Siberia whither he was going after but three days of married life. Eulalie persuades Sylvia Breamer, the ingenue in the company, who is without funds and in poor health, to present herself to Gordon's mother as her son's widow and thereby acquire a home and a share of the southerner's fortune.

Of course hero returns and things look rather bad for a time but after two scheming relatives have their plans badly foiled, matters clear up very nicely and Robert and Sylvia are legally married. Hero's return is effectively presented by having him appear in the midst of the negro mammy's voodoo incantations during a heavy storm.

Use Blackton's Name and Trust That They Will Be Satisfied

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You will probably be willing to accept this for its technical and artistic value in spite of the fact that the story isn't very strong. It does contain some originality in its treatment but there are moments too decidedly obvious that detract from its distinction.

At one time particularly it seemed essentially unnecessary and improper at the height of a dramatic moment to turn it to comedy by having the three leading women characters pitch in to a hair pulling match. It may be that it should be taken seriously but everyone will be inclined to laugh right out at it.

You have every advantage in "Respectable by Proxy" from a production angle. Director Blackton has exercised his usual care with details and generally speaking has provided a production pleasing to look at, good photography, splendid effects and has handled the players effectively. He has incorporated some delightful bits of darkey mannerisms and human touches through the characters of the old negro couple which will be sure to please.

Weak and Mechanical Production that Never Approaches the Dramatic

Mary MacLaren in
"THE FORGED BRIDE"
Universal

DIRECTOR.....Douglas Gerrard
AUTHOR.....J. G. Hawks
SCENARIO BY.....Hal Hoadley
CAMERAMAN Not mentioned
AS A WHOLE.....Rather weak and mechanical production that never generates any real interest.
STORY.....Is built about a single idea that shows only with little force in the climax; a lot of old situations supplied to lead up to it.
DIRECTION.....Looks as if the director had had to hurry to get through with this; no good touches or imagination displayed in handling material.
PHOTOGRAPHY..... Average
LIGHTINGS .....Same
CAMERA WORK.....All straight shots
STAR.....Doesn't show much acting; just walks through her part.
SUPPORT.....Harold Miller, leading man, very poor actor; rest only average.
EXTERIORS.....A beach resort that looks like Coney or Venice labelled as the playground of the fashionable rich.
INTERIORS....Very plain and sometimes give appearance of cheapness.
DETAIL.....Some real ten, twenty, thirt' subtitles
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Forger disclaims being father of girl to save her from disgrace
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,990 feet

There may have been possibilities for a good picture lying in the central idea of "The Forged Bride" but certainly those concerned in its production here have failed to realize them. The climax resembles one of those human interest vaudeville acts, in which the crook, (in this case he is a forger), arranges things so that it will appear his daughter is really another man's child, thus saving her from disgrace and permitting her to go happily on her married way without any shadow hanging over her. The orchestra usually plays "Hearts and Flowers" for this.

But in the working out of it the scenarist has employed a lot of hackneyed situations to form the body of the picture while the director has showed neither taste in the production of the individual scenes nor any imaginative attempt to bring out what few high lights there were in the 'script. Even in the handling of the climax when the old forger pulls his sacrifice stunt, the action is stimulated by no dramatic feeling or suspensive interest.

After old Bill Reynolds has been sent to jail for forgery, his daughter gets a job at a "fashionable resort" selling pop and souvenirs. The resort looks like Venice or Coney Island. Here she meets Dick Van Courtland, scion of wealth. They marry and Dick takes her home to his mother who for some reason is living in the same house with Judge Farrell, who in turn for some other reason harbors one Clara Ramerez, villainess extraordinary, in his home. Clara had her cap set for Dick and does considerable chest heaving when she learns that Peggy has won him.

It is left to her to find out that Peggy's father is a jailbird. Then she accuses her of it before Dick but old Reynolds, divining what was going to happen, breaks jail and walks in at that moment with a forged letter proving that Peggy is really the judge's long lost daughter. The judge knows it's all a frame-up but for the sake of everyone's happiness says nothing.

Mary MacLaren walks through her role in a listless fashion. Harold L. Miller appearing as Dick is no actor. Barney Sherry makes the role of the judge quite human while others are Dorothy Hagan and Dagmar Godowsky, villainess.

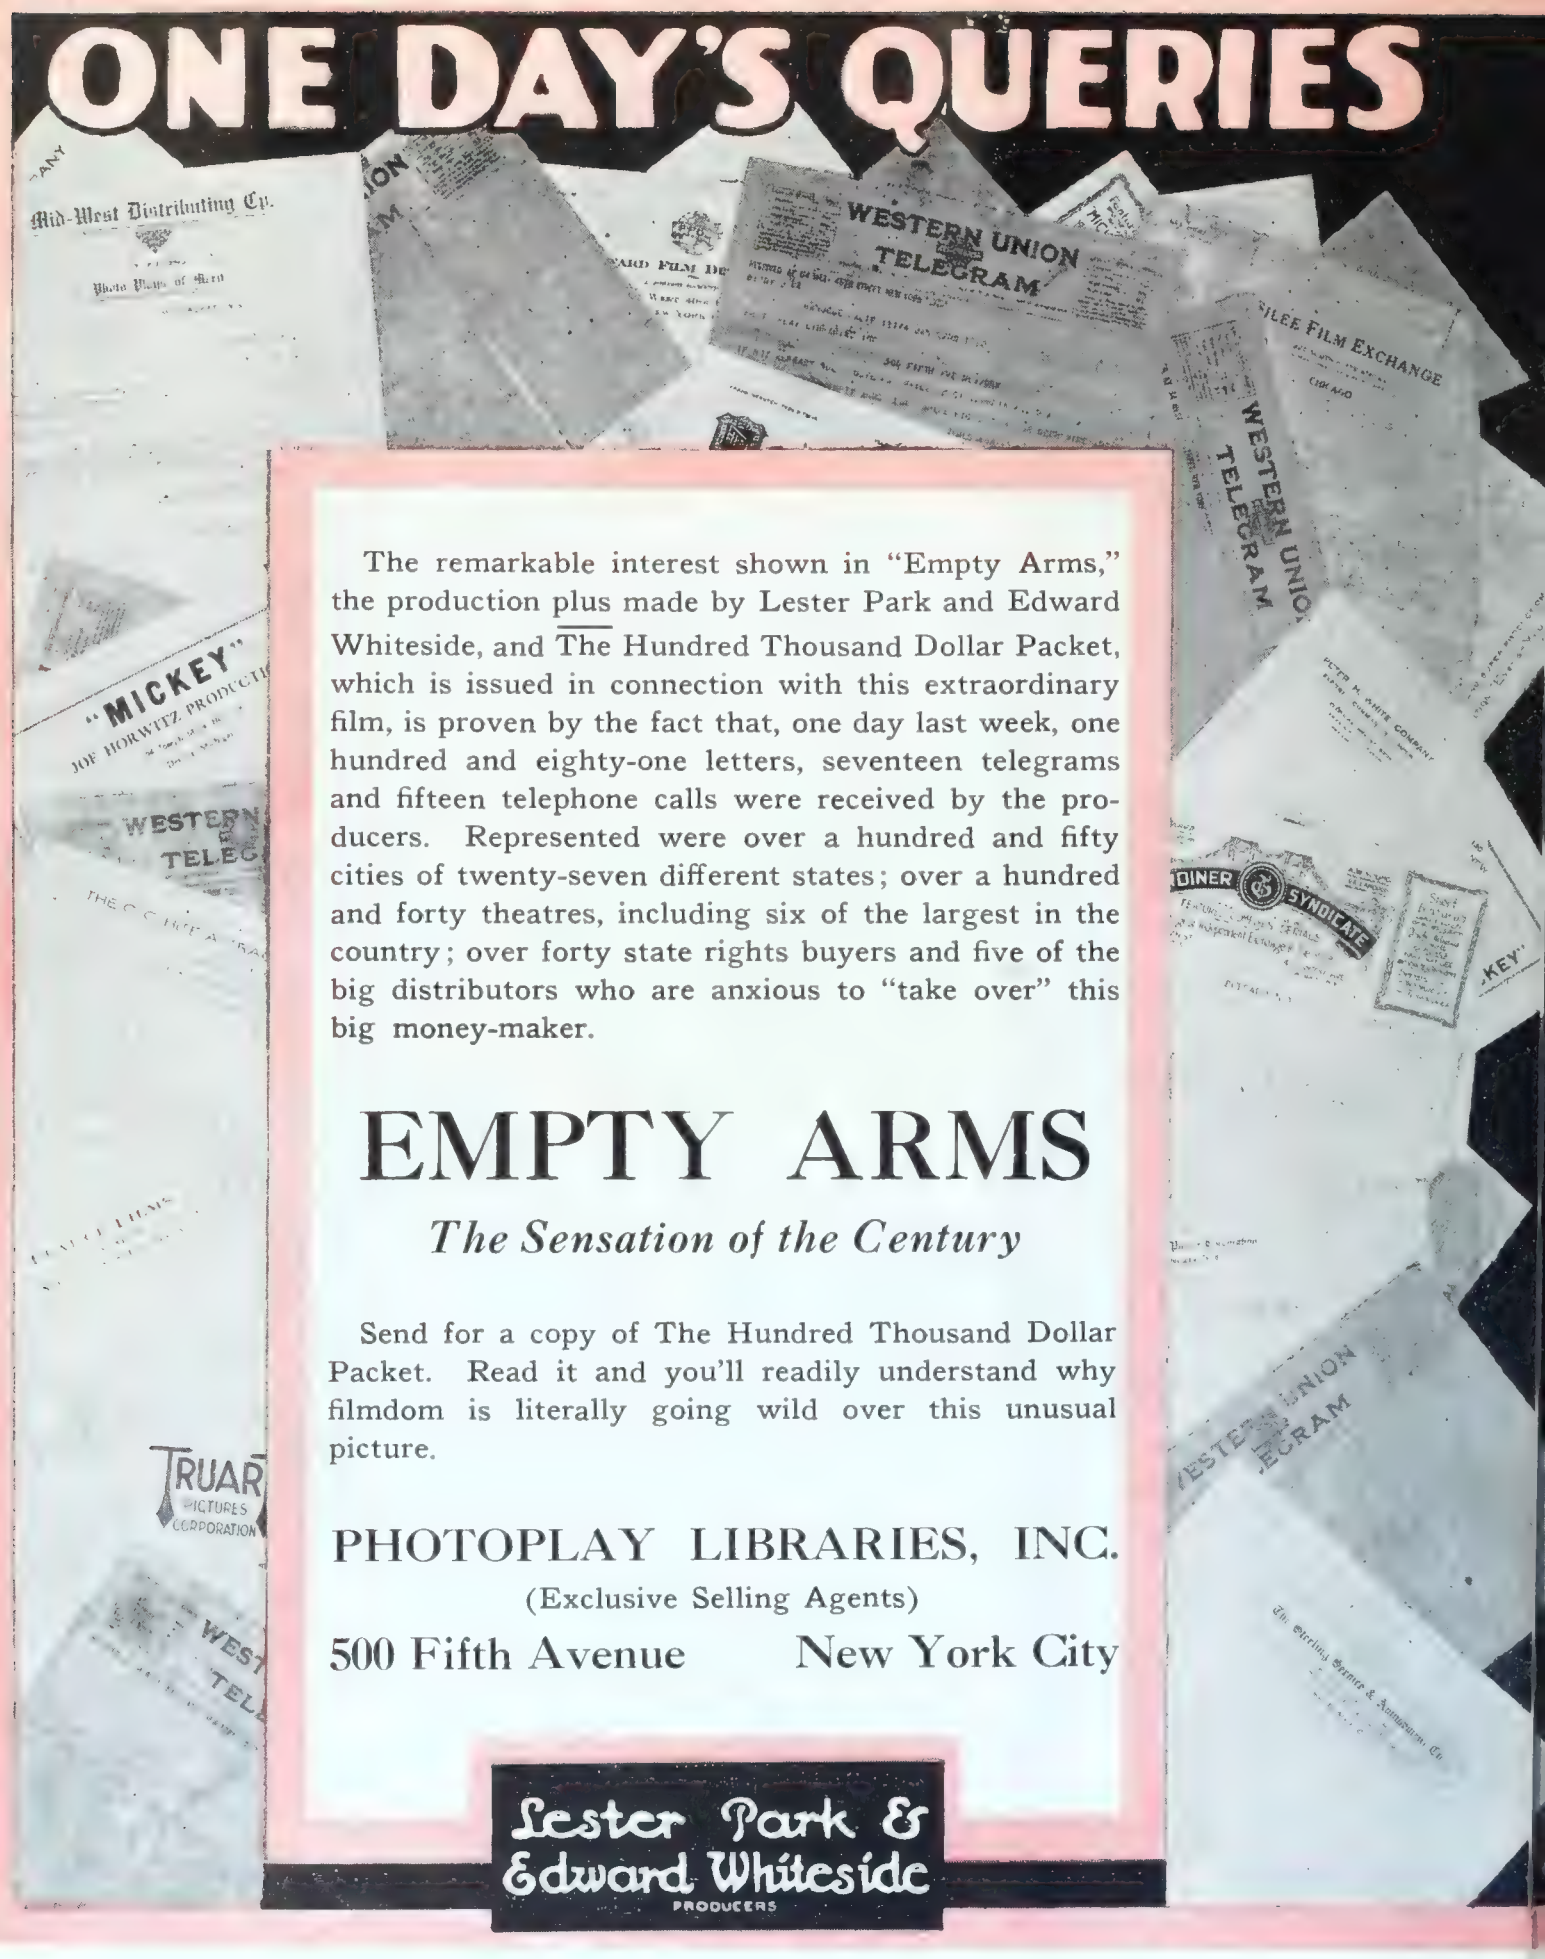
Not Much to Attract or Satisfy in This One

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There certainly isn't much to commend about this one. While the idea seems to contain possibilities those connected with its production here never grasped them and showed any real ability in developing the material in hand. As a result the picture can not fail to give the impression of weakness and flatness. More than that the director's choice of exterior settings and the rather cheap aspect of the interiors make it seem that little money was spent on it and as a result it fails to compare with the majority of the feaures produced to-day.

As a production to advertise, the climax idea and the title are the only essentials that can be played up to advantage. If you book it then use these and don't acclaim the story proper with adjectives. However, audiences educated to the average picture of the day will find this considerably below standard.

ONE DAY'S QUERIES



The remarkable interest shown in "Empty Arms," the production plus made by Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, and The Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet, which is issued in connection with this extraordinary film, is proven by the fact that, one day last week, one hundred and eighty-one letters, seventeen telegrams and fifteen telephone calls were received by the producers. Represented were over a hundred and fifty cities of twenty-seven different states; over a hundred and forty theatres, including six of the largest in the country; over forty state rights buyers and five of the big distributors who are anxious to "take over" this big money-maker.

Business of Going All Wrong on a Good Idea

"THE BIRTH OF A SOUL"
Vitagraph

DIRECTOR .....Edwin L. Hollywood
AUTHOR .....Arthur Edwin Krows
SCENARIO BY .....Arthur Edwin Krows
CAMERAMAN ..... Robert A. Stuart
AS A WHOLE.....A Cumberland mountain feudist picture that spends all its time leading up to a climax that fails to get over.
STORY.....Author has taken the climax situation from Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities," but it loses its effect through poor treatment.
DIRECTION.....Failed to realize on the dramatic worth of the climax, nor are any forceful highlight evinced.

EXTERIORS .....Good Kentucky mountain stuff
INTERIORS ..... Plain and appropriate
DETAIL.....Picture shows signs of being revised in cutting room; and the job wasn't clever.
CHARACTER OF STORY....Worthless man takes hero's place and goes to death for love of girl.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,650 feet

You all know the dramatic climax of Charles Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities," when the more or less worthless fellow takes the hero's place and is killed on the guillotine, all for the love of a girl. That's a situation offering at least big dramatic possibilities. It is this situation around which they have built "The Birth of a Soul." But the parallel between Dickens' classic and the present work can go no further than that. In the process of modernization and in the author's attempt to alter the details of the climax, the dramatic bolt of the novel becomes almost unmoving and entirely unconvincing.

It looks as if the 'script furnished by the author might have contained good material for an unusual feature. But either the director or the person who cut and titled the picture have taken what measure of dramatic force and conviction out of it altogether. The body of the picture is taken up with mere building toward the climax. This is a clever but dangerous device in picture construction. If the climax is powerful and justifies all the footage leading up to it all well and good but if not the final emotion of the spectator is utter disgust at being fooled.

The locale is the familiar old Kentucky Cumberlands and an ancient feud is revived by foolish mountaineers. It so happens that two of the parties of the opposing sides, Charles Drayton and Dorothy Barlow, have married but Drayton is taken captive by the Barlows and threatened with hanging unless his uncle, the man who fired the shot that renewed the feud, is brought back dead or alive before nightfall.

Nightfall comes and the murderer is still absent and so they prepare to hang Drayton. But Philip Grey, a drink-sodden and worthless admirer of Dorothy's who bears a resemblance to Drayton takes his place that husband and wife may go away together. The climax is handled with no more sense of the dramatic than it is told here. It is not led up to expertly nor is it handled with an eye for dramatic or suspensive effect. It's all over when you're still looking for the drama.

Harry Morey gives two sincere performances but is unable to lift the picture. Jean Paige, George Cooper, Walter Lewis, Charles Eldridge and Charles Kent made up an average supporting cast.

Better Be Looking the Other Way When This One Comes Along

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Certainly Vitagraph had a good chance to show an unusual picture in "The Birth of a Soul" considering the fact that the most dramatic situation from all of Charles Dickens' works was borrowed for the occasion. But certainly again the producers have fallen down on the job and the picture stands as a mighty poor effort to derive drama out of a proven dramatic situation.

The best thing to do under the circumstances is to be looking the other way when "The Birth of a Soul" comes along. It's certainly liable to get an audience sore on you when it's all over, for the main action of the picture, slack of interest though it is, keeps promising and promising something pretty big as a climax and then when at last this sequence puts in its appearance it falls completely flat. As a consequence of all this the advertising worth of the picture which is unusual because of the origin of the climax, would probably act as a boomerang to the exhibitor.

SCENARIO BY.....Denison Clift
CAMERAMAN .....Vernon Walker

CAMERA WORK.....One of the features
STAR.....Gets off to a fine start in initial production; unassuming and has a personality that will win him many admirers.
SUPPORT.....Vivian Rich pleasing; western types all fine.
EXTERIORS.....Beautiful shots of western country
INTERIORS.....Up-to-date ranch home
DETAIL.....Used same interior scenes too often
CHARACTER OF STORY.....City girl gives up city ways through goodly influence of cowboy hero.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

William Fox has become his own competitor and introduced a second cowboy star in the person of Buck Jones who makes his initial bow to stardom in "The Last Straw." Taking all in all it must be conceded that the latest cowboy hero will probably meet with the approval of the picture-loving public, more especially those admirers of western photoplays.

The star's work in his first picture is confined to a straight role and although he does do some fast riding there are no hair-raising plunges from cliffs or daring riding feats. It may be that the producer is hoarding up some surprises for forthcoming productions, but at any rate Jones has personality just a little different than most of the western heroes we have had so far. There is a certain sincerity of purpose about his portrayal that will be sure to please.

A story well adapted to the star has been secured and Denison Clift has handled it satisfactorily for the most part. There are numerous beautiful shots of western country which add to a generally pleasing production.

Vivian Rich arrives in the west to live on the ranch which she has inherited. She decides to select a foreman for the place by having the men draw straws. Jones doesn't participate in the lottery because he refuses to take a chance. It happens that the last straw, and the one which he would have drawn, is the lucky one. A fellow named Hepburn is made foreman and it isn't long before hero intuitively learns that Hepburn is in league with the cattle rustlers on a neighboring ranch.

A former wealthy suitor whom Vivian turned down when she fell heir to the ranch, follows her west and is going through some cave-man manouevers when hero Buck intervenes and orders him from the house. All this time hero is gradually falling in love with Vivian and when he goes in pursuit of the rustlers she gives him a locket containing the last straw but telling him not to open it, that it would bring him good luck.

After being captured by the rustlers and left to die on the plain, Buck succeeds in getting back to Vivian and there is the usual reunion. There are several weak spots in the thread of the story and an audience may have difficulty in understanding the progress of the action. However, matters clear up as they go along and in the end it doesn't make a great deal of difference.

Get Them Acquainted With the New Cowboy Hero. They'll Like Him

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You will probably have little trouble in launching the new Fox star inasmuch as his first production gets off to a good start and his is a personality that is distinct. His work is done in a congenial manner with no display of "acting." His naturalness and adaptability in the role portrayed in "The Last Straw" should win him many friends at the start.

In introducing the latest Fox star you can safely promise a story with a real western atmosphere, minus the usual dance hall scenes and having some real pleasing romance and just enough shootin' to let you know you're out west. With the exception of one or two evidences of bad continuity you can assure them they will like the story and even the few slip-ups may get by unnoticed.

If you intend showing the future productions of this new star you will do well to give him a good send-off for his initial presentation and make enough fuss to get folks interested at the start.

EXTERIORS.....Pretty country estate stuff
INTERIORS .....Highly appropriate
DETAIL.....Some fine comedy subtitles
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Chorus girl wins love of woman-hater through peculiar series of circumstances.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,998 feet

There is no series of pictures on the market to-day that is more well balanced and more certain with respect to each particular release than the Constance Talmadge light comedy series. This gay, young and highly infectious actress has been hitting on high for over a year now and she shows no signs of slowing up yet. "Two Weeks" is the latest case in point. It is an excellent light comedy that starts off with a sequence more or less surprising and gets into its comedy pace along about the second reel staying there delightfully until the conclusion.

The pep which Miss Talmadge injects into all her roles, the good stories supplied her, the fine treatment accorded them, the admirably selected supporting casts, all these have brought Miss Talmadge to the very forefront of screen entertainers. And every one of these elements is present in "Two Weeks" with the inevitable conclusion to be arrived at by the reviewer—a superb comedy.

Lillums Blair, a chorus girl, permits Clonbarry, a man-about-town to take something of a financial interest in her believing he is sincerely concerned about her future on the stage. On the way to a house party given by a theatrical manager, the beast in Clonbarry becomes apparent and Lillums runs away from him, landing at "The Barn," a country estate maintained by a novelist, a sculptor and a dramatic critic. The latter two are old men, the former a young woman-hater.

Lillums gets an invitation to stay two weeks at the barn and of course at the end of that time she has completely captured the hearts of all three of her hosts, although the novelist is, true to form, the most reticent to admit capitulation. A cleverly devised comedy climax during which Clonbarry again enters the action brings the novelist to the proposing point.

The comedy arises from situations and business naturally born of a predicament of the bachelors when Lillums enters their household and it is enriched by the excellent performances. George Fawcett in the part of the critic stands sponsor for much of it and the play between the star and Conway Tearle as the novelist brings in more. Templar Saxe as the sculptor and Reginald Mason and Tom Cameron complete the cast of principals.

Tell 'Em It's Constance Talmadge Again; Her Name Will Do the Rest

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

In these days of highly publicized "brand" names it would be worth while to stop and consider the value of Constance Talmadge's name. Certain it is that all most theaters have to do is to flash her name and the crowds come a-running, sure of seeing a crackerjack of a comedy. Since Miss Talmadge started making comedies for Select it is hard to call one to mind that hasn't been worthy. Without a doubt she is the best comedienne on the screen to-day in the combined points of popularity and ability.

"Two Weeks" is going to score as have her others, and it isn't going to take much more than the display of her name to bring the crowds in. All you need to worry about is to grab it up before the other fellow gets it and then just go to it featuring every advertisement around the name of the star. Such advertisements should be light, of course, and in the present instance the title and the situation of a girl remaining two weeks in a house with three bachelors should furnish sufficient ground work for advertisements that will really attract.

On the whole this Vitagraph is a very ordinary production. It presents a melodrama filled with any number of "convenient" situations, the appeal of which is confined to houses of the daily change and transient type. Certainly it isn't big league stuff.

Gladys Leslie appears as Jeanne Sterling, a country girl who goes to New York to visit her friend and finds the house locked up. In the park awaiting her train home she meets Forrest Chenoworth, a rich idler, whose money has gotten him into trouble with a lady named Jane. While drunk Forrest has taken out a marriage license with Jane but when sober had told her he never wanted to see her again.

Jeanne comes in to see Forrest again and he proposes. They are married by an alderman, a friend of Forrest's, on the license which he took out with Jane. The alderman's son, a waster, is acquainted with Jane and fills out the marriage certificate (which Forrest had conveniently said he would call for later) with her name. That night Forrest imbibes too much, falls in his room and kills himself.

The scandal appears in the papers and finally Jeanne confesses to her country sweetheart, Bob, that she was married to Forrest. He refuses to believe her. Then she insists that he accompany her to the alderman's home where she says the proof will be furnished. But the alderman's son has been on the job. He has set Jane up as Forrest's widow and helped her in her claim for part of the dead man's fortune. The license and certificate come in handy for this game.

Son has induced the alderman to refuse to recognize Jeanne should she put in an appearance, so when she shows up with Bob no one at the house admits having seen her before. This is the best sequence in the picture and ends when the alderman, finally overcome by Jeanne's plight and the realization that her good name is in jeopardy finally exposes his son's entire game.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Gladys Leslie in

"THE MIDNIGHT BRIDE"

Vitagraph

"The Midnight Bride" stands a fair chance of getting by before a more or less careless transient audience but certainly it has no place on the screens of first run and high class neighborhood theaters. The story, besides being convenient in the extreme, is so intricate that most all the footage is taken up planting stuff and the drama, if such there was, never stood a fair chance any way.

The picture is really of the type that was produced in the days when features first came on the market, and except for the fact of the combination of players in the cast, might easily be taken as a reissue, for it bears none of the marks of progress which characterize the majority of features produced to-day.

If you play it don't make a big noise about it, for any live-wire audience is going to find it lacking in many respects.

Pleasing and Dramatic Production of a Real Human Story

Bessie Barriscale in
"THE LUCK OF GERALDINE LAIRD"
B. B. Prod.—Robertson-Cole

DIRECTOR ..... Edward Sloman
AUTHOR ..... Kathleen Norris
SCENARIO BY ..... Harvey Gates
CAMERAMAN ..... Eugene Gaudio
AS A WHOLE.....Pleasing, realistic and dramatic production of very fine picture material.
STORY.....Contains wonderfully real and appealing characterization and considerable dramatic action.
DIRECTION.....Has registered human side of picture exceedingly well.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Realistic
CAMERA WORK ..... Very good
STAR.....Demonstrates again that she is an actress at home in any sort of mood.
SUPPORT.....Niles Welch good opposite; William Mong in fine comedy characterization.
EXTERIORS ..... Few but appropriate
INTERIORS.....Very realistic in all sequences
DETAIL.....Picture rings true in all phases; detail exceptionally true.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Wife wins back good but weak husband through series of "lucky" circumstances.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

True-to-life characterization and well-devised dramatic action make "The Luck of Geraldine Laird" one of the most enjoyable features seen in some time. There is nothing extravagant or startling about it but at the same time every person who sees it is going to recognize its realism and the effective manner in which the story has been told.

Geraldine Laird, though married, lives with her mother, much to the sometimes evident disgust of her husband. He would like a smaller home where he could see more of his wife and two daughters and not so much of in-laws and uninvited guests. Laird has an ambition to write plays and when Kennedy Bond, a play-broker who is visiting the village, tells him his work has merit, he decides to go to New York.

Kennedy is also something of a flirt and succeeds in creating a breach between Laird and Geraldine. Laird, finally deserts his family and refuses to answer his wife's letters when he believes himself progressing in New York. And Geraldine continues to flirt with Bond, getting a dinner from him whenever she can.

Circumstances bring Geraldine to New York and a short time afterwards she becomes the star in a musical entertainment giving a series of imitations that gained her fame at home. And later at a banquet in her honor she meets her husband again, now a confessed failure at playwrighting. Suffering his neglect deeply Geraldine in a dramatic scene denounces him before the rest of the guests and then afterwards believing that he has suffered sufficiently for his mistakes, she brings about a happy reconciliation.

The opening sequence showing scenes about the dinner table in Geraldine's home is filled with humor and real human-interest stuff. The plot runs smoothly all the way and rises to fine heights in the denunciation scene. Some fine comedy is introduced by the figures of Goldman, the theatrical producer and his son. William Mong gives a rare performance in the part of the showman.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Bessie Barriscale in
"THE LUCK OF GERALDINE LAIRD"
B. B. Prod.—Robertson-Cole

Here's a picture that gets into that class of films that are bound to entertain because they are so human. They had a human idea to work with in the original story and certainly they have succeeded in making it very human on the screen particularly as Miss Barriscale enacts a role with all the realism that is at her command.

Neither the title nor the star are profuse in advertising and attracting possibilities but certainly "The Luck of Geraldine Laird" deserves all the advertising that you can possibly give it for it's a picture that will score nicely with any sort of audience. When you come down to essentials it's a great entertainment picture but one which may be difficult to handle from the box office angle. But it surely deserves all you care to give it and it is also one of those pictures that, shown one day, will do an increased business the next, in all probability.

Some Short Reels

"Taken With a Grain of Salt," Ford—Goldwyn

Salt mining, all of the processes, including the preparations for blasting, the crushing of the raw mineral, the manner in which it is brought to the surface of the earth, and numerous other bits of information about the securing of the product are depicted in this industrial reel. It measures up to the same standard, and will serve the same purpose as those that have come before.

"Religious City of Benares," Mentor

Three parts, each of them colored in splendid fashion and each of them an acceptable subject comprise this Mentor reel. "The Religious City of Benares" is the first portion although not a very unusual scenic, will hold its own because of the coloring. A North African Mohammedan harem, in which different dark skinned women are shown, takes up the footage in the second section, and closing, are shots of birds and animals of Brazil, which have been tinted, only one shade being employed in each case. This should get a fair amount of booking.

"Japanese Millinery," Mentor

What are commonly known as Panama hats of the less expensive variety, really made of paper and in Japan, are shown in the various stages of the making in the greater portion of this offering. The lack of light on the interior shots detracts from the value of the good coloring and otherwise commendable work of the production. A second part, concerning the hunting of monkeys is unusually interesting and has been colored magnificently. The unusual method of catching apes sometimes employed—the scheme of putting fruit into a calabash into which the creature thrusts its paw, and from which it cannot extricate it because it is unwilling to release the fruit has been filmed excellently and will hold attention.

"The Big Guns of Our Navy," Prizma—Republic

Combining splendid coloring with general effectiveness, this Prizma reel is sure to register on any program. Possibly it is the best thing turned out by that organization yet. Certainly, it is one of the best. The reel takes the spectator from the factory in which the metal is forged to the decks of the large battleship from which shot after shot is fired. There is where the big punch in the offering lies. Powerful and brilliant, the spectacle is one that will impress. Were it not for the coloring, this would be classed as an educational production, but in its present form, it will easily serve as entertainment.

"Topics of the Day," 39, Timely Films—Pathe

Most of the comments that make up this issue of Topics of the Day are quite clever, but the fact that there are now so many similar screen offerings apparently is serving to limit the amount of material, and the spontaneous effect of the topics is missing now and then. One quip used, about Lenine and Trotzky being shot in the "Nevsky Prospect," is quite funny, but has been used before. Other remarks are on the usual current topics such as liquor, telephone service, etc.

"The Garage," Arbuckle—Famous

Photographed and staged in fine style, the slapstick comedy bits that make up this two reel comedy will draw round after round of laughter. The star gives a most satisfactory exhibition, and there are numerous bits of business that are distinctly novel. Some of the stuff is not strictly laugh provoking matter, there being a flash of pie being tossed across the scene of action, and some water splashing material. Fortunately, however, only one pie is thrown and the water episode is brought in so cleverly, that it will induce your audience to laugh in spite of the fact that they have seen it done before. What is especially out of the ordinary is the portion in which an automobile spins about on a turn-table. Ludicrous and laughable is the section, in which the stout comedian and his associate dash to the scene of the fire, find that they have forgotten to bring their fire hats, and hurry back for them. The grease stuff will get over and although there is nothing especially meritorious in the chase part, most of this is first rate. You can exploit it, and it will prove quite a drawing card beside any feature you may happen to be showing.

"Roarin' Dan," Universal

Ethel Shannon who plays the feminine lead in this two reel western in which Hoot Gibson has the stellar role, is a newcomer to the company and gives quite a satisfactory exhibition, as do most of the other members of the cast. What handicaps the offering is the lack of novelty in theme, for the story is much like some of the others turned out by Gibson. It possesses some comedy relief common to pictures of this type, and enough action to cause the youngsters to grow enthusiastic, but if they have been seeing Gibson's work regularly, it may not go so well.

"My Girl Suzanne," Adolph Phillip—Capital

Employing the plot of one of his musical comedies, Adolph Phillip has turned out a two reel comedy, in which he plays the star role. Jules Cronjager is credited with cranking the camera, and titles are by Tom Bret. Thematically, this meets all of the requirements. It possesses several clever situations and has a surprising conclusion. The staging of the production, however, leaves much to be desired. Technically, there are also some faults, and it is only the quality of the story material that saves it, and makes it a fair comedy.

"Elmo, the Fearless," Universal

Excitement, action and thrills are wanted in serials and some mystery thrown in always helps. Thus, judging from the manner in which it starts, is going to be a hummer. It has a rattling good scrap in a coast dive to begin with, and plots, fights, and everything else after that. There is also a mysterious character, and here, the direction seemed to slip up a trifle, for they failed to accentuate the masked figure properly, but otherwise, it has been handled well. Closing the initial episode is a wreck, coming after a fight and some excellent bits showing the boats being dashed upon the rocks.

The camera work is certainly very satisfactory, and the photography acceptable. Elmo Lincoln who is starred does some meritorious work, and so do several others in the cast. J. P. McGowan directed and Henry Arthur Gooden wrote the story. Among the players are Louise Lorraine, Ray Watson, Gordon McGregor, Frank Ellis, V. L. Barns, and others. You will satisfy a serial crowd with this, if the other episodes are anything like the first.

Short Reels

Another Mentor Scenic

Bamboo and Bruges, are dealt with in another Mentor reel which ranks with the best turned out by that organization so far. Anyone with any sort of regard for the beautiful will enthuse about it, for it is colored excellently. Various uses, and there are many of them, of bamboo in Iindo-China are pictured in the opening portion, and the waterways of Bruges, Belgium, are traveled over by the spectator in the closing part. And it is some of the best water stuff seen in scenics in a long while. If you need a colored offering of this sort, grab this. You don't have to take the trouble to look at it before booking it.

"The Whirlwind," Allgood Pictures Corp.

Considering the technical end of this and the work of the characters, the story, the action, thrills and various devices as judged by the first three episodes—the serial is likely to prove a hummer. There are a few slips, but they are of minor importance, for there is enough plot, enough of a battle between the forces of right and wrong and a sufficient amount of novelty to put this across.

Joseph A. Golden who wrote and directed the production in which Charles Hutchison plays the title role has done his work well and the star certainly deserves credit. His acrobatic exploits, his work while perched on the motorcycle and all else place him in the front rank with serial stars. And there is some good comedy relief that helps. Edith Thornton in the leading feminine role is attractive and Richard Neill looks wicked enough as the villain. In addition there are Eddy Kelly, Barbara Allen, and many others. "The Whirlwind," "Waters of Death," and "Blown Skyward" are the titles of the first three sections, all of which end so as to arouse curiosity. Although the situation closing the second is an old one, it has been screened so as to register heavily. If you play to a serial audience, it will be worth your while to see this.

"Mirrors of Nature," Famous Players

Lakes and pools, in which the beauties of nature are reflected have been screened by Burton Holmes in this scenic offering which ranks with the best turned out in a long while. There have been numerous commendable productions of this sort turned out of late but this can compare favorably with any of them. Variety is the keynote in it as far as the selection of territory is concerned, for Holmes has traveled far and wide to shoot the different portions. Presented at one of the Broadway houses the reel drew a round of applause at the finish, and a scenic must be above the ordinary to do that.

"Over the Transom," Universal

Bits of slapstick comedy make up this offering in which the work of a well-trained ape furnishes novelty. Photographed and staged excellently, the piece which was turned out by Fred Fishback has enough that is funny to put it over. The cast includes two capable comedians and the ape is the cause of a plentiful share of the laughs. Taken as a whole, it is as good as anything Fishback has done in some time.

"Over the Ocean Waves," Century—Universal

Opening with an excellent portion burlesquing a supersavage skipper of a sailing vessel, this hits a fast pace until the end, and although the early part of it is by far the best, there is a sufficient amount of good comedy material to keep it going until the very end. Charlie from the Orient is featured, and gives a satisfactory exhibition. The captain of the ship is splendid and deserves some mention, while the others do all that is expected of them. All of this is slapstick, but it's good slapstick and will get laughs even from a blase crowd.

"Mr. Outing Gets a Pipe Dream," Chester

Yellowstone Park furnished the natural settings for this scenic reel which is up to the usual Chester standard. There are shots showing most of the geysers, canyons, and other places of note or beauty or both, to be seen there. Raymond Agnel is credited with the photography and his end of the work was held up in good style. Most of the scenes included will hold the eye.

"Lightning Bryce," National—State Rights

The start of this serial was not very startling, but in the tenth episode, called "Poisoned Waters," the photography and locations chosen show more than a distinct improvement. In the following episodes, there is again a falling off in places, but the unravelling of the story will hold attention. There are several thrilling episode endings and a rattling good battle between the villain, Paul Hurst and the avenging Indian. The direction holds up in good style except in one or two spots and the members of the cast do all that is expected of them. Winding up in fine fashion, the offering maintains interest until the very finish.

"Hopping the Bells," Arrow

Hank Mann in an automobile, and Madge Kirby trying to dodge the many vehicles that make it necessary for her to step about spryly, put over some creditable scenes at the start, but after the footage in the early portion, this evolves into a series of ordinary slapstick bits, a few of which are unusual, but most of which are quite commonplace. Fred C. Windermere directed the reel, which is built on a story that did not offer many possibilities.

"Two Dollars, Please," Goldwyn

Although this has a commendable theme, they did not get as much out of it as possible. It is a considerable improvement over the most recent effort of Neal Burns and Marie Eline, the former being starred in this and the latter featured. Several bits in this are laughable and the offering as a whole, will go across in fairly convincing manner. Franklin Hall directed.

Bray Pictograph, 418, Goldwyn

Instead of the usual three parts, this Bray has two sections, the first of which is rather lengthy. It shows the Indian inhabitants of Taos, New Mexico, a tribe that lives in an old Pueblo dwelling, and is fairly interesting study, of the type seen quite frequently in travel films. "Sufficiency," a Jerry on the Job cartoon which is appended to the first part is unusually funny and finishes the reel in good style.

Short Reels

"New Screen Magazine," No. 52, Universal

Hal Hodes who edits Universal's Screen Magazine has put together some interesting bits in issue 52. The opening part is not ideal for the purpose, but the part devoted to the dramatic efforts of Japanese screen performers will get its full quota of laughs. Some footage devoted to experiments with liquid air is of merit and then there are some ridiculous answers to examination questions that for the greater part are funny. A fair reel of its sort, with the portion showing the actors from the Land of the Rising Sun the best thing in it.

"Excess Baggage," Goldwyn

One good reel could have been made out of the material used in this production, starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven, and occupying two. In drawing it out to its present length, however, much of its mirth-provoking value has been lost, and the result is a very ordinary offering. There is nothing startling about the work of the supporting cast, nor the direction. A few bits included in it will draw some laughs, but for the greater part it moves quite slowly.

This concerns a young married couple who are visited by their mothers. Trouble is caused by the sleeping problem, both members of the little family making sacrifices to please their parents, but failing in spite of their efforts. Finally hubby conceives the plan of getting his father to call both mothers away to a picnic. After they leave he confesses to his wife that it was a prearranged plan with his father, and instead of being unpleasantly surprised by the information, she admits that it could not have been managed better by herself.

"I and the Mountain," Robertson—Cole

Mountain shots, lakes, rivers, forest scenes and titles, just a few too many, make up a creditable scenic. The camera work throughout is especially deserving of mention, and the locations show excellent judgment. Most of the stuff is very pleasing.

"All Lit Up," Pathe

Outdoor scenes of merit make up the early portion of another of Snub Pollard's one reel comedies which moves along rapidly and has a good deal in it that will provoke laughter. The scene in which the artist and girl appear at the start is quite funny and there are others that are also laughable. There is a fairly clever story, and the production technically is up to the mark.

The story deals with a Dandy, played by Pollard, who after causing trouble while chasing butterflies, walks into a cafe. Previously entrusted with a baby, he has left it with a little colored newsboy. In the restaurant he receives a beating from the artist for flirting with the latter's wife. Taken by mistake to the artist's home, he is again trounced and finally, a pair of coppers take him in hand, spurred on by the mother of the child, he has deserted.

"The Black Secret," Pathe

Only the final solution to this serial is left, when episode 14, "The Hidden Way" is completed. Pearl White and Walter McGrail after getting to the "Great Secret" are captured by the enemy and once more, Wallace McCutcheon, who at times has been suspected and recently thought fatally injured, bobs up, as the German officer. The end of this finds the hero and heroine facing a firing squad. The camera work and photography are excellent throughout.

"De-light," Ford—Goldwyn

Handled in the usual manner in which this organization produces its industrial reels, this one which deals with the making of electric bulbs will prove of interest. Towards the latter part, everything is not made as clear as it might have been made, but the offering shows good treatment of the subject at hand. Most people are not very familiar with the intricacies of the making of light bulbs and will find this a source of information.

"The Flowing Road," Ford—Goldwyn

From the placid lakes of the mountains to the sea, the course of a river is pursued in "The Flowing Road." Titles are written in the first person, that is, as a river would tell its tale. Many scenic shots of merit are included in the offering, the opening part of which is somewhat more effective than that which comes later. A worth while reel all things considered, in fact, as good a thing as Ford has done recently.

"Kaintuck's Ward," Universal

Shop-worn situations, almost all of them familiar, make up this two-reel western, in which the most glaring among several faults is the lack of the unusual. The same crowd that patronizes serials will like this, for it has some pathos, and some thrills according to an ancient formula. If your crowd consists largely of the younger generation, or is not very discriminating, you can play this and it will probably get over. On the other hand, if you are in the habit of playing better pictures and have a regular fan audience, be careful.

"Elmo, the Fearless," Universal

Crashing trains have often been used to supply thrills in motion pictures, but in the second episode, the thrills that a runaway car and rapidly moving train coming towards each other afford are so well sustained that it will undoubtedly give serial fans cause to enthuse. In the fourth episode there is not as much punch but it has enough scrappy stuff to maintain a very satisfactory average. Elmo Lincoln of course is a drawing card, and this will add to his popularity, for the serial does possess action and that is what they want.

"A Sagebrush Gentleman," Universal

Charlotte Merriam and Bob Burns play the leading roles in a two-reel western directed by Edward Sowders. There is not as much action in this as there is in most offerings of this type and there is too little of the element of suspense. Anyone who has seen a fair amount of western drama will have little trouble outguessing it. The cast performs in fairly good style and that helps.

Abducted by mistake, an eastern girl in the distant land of the west is rescued by Tex Deane. At first, the girl believes Tex to be her abductor and asserts that she is married. There being no hotel in town, and the train service being curtailed because of trouble, she is forced to remain in the home of Tex. No harm comes to her, and when he rescues her after another attempted abduction, they execute a clutch.

OUR activities and energies are dedicated to the principle of artistic achievement.

We shall establish our standard on story values.

The policy on which we have organized is first, last and all the time good stories.

We shall place judgment upon our material only insofar as our staff finds the stories adaptable for picturization. We aim to picturize only big-selling books and successful plays that have great picture value. At the present time we have more of this material than we can produce in several years.

To assist the "box office" pull of a good story, exhibitors have united in advising us to use "stars," but not to change the story to suit the talents of a star—the story is the thing. We will get picture-stars to fit our picture-stories.

Our methods for insurance of success are—first, picture stories; second, directors and players selected to suit the story; third, perfection of organization to mould these elements and to place them on the screen.

Magazine Writer Thinks La Crosse Children Spend Too Much for Pictures

Carl Marshal writing in "The Thrift Magazine" says that the school children of La Crosse, Wis. bought so few War Saving Stamps that the superintendent of schools issued a questionnaire which included these questions:

How many times did you attend the movies during the week?

How much money did you spend for movies?

How much money did you spend for other amusements?

How much money did you spend for candy and sweets?

The article goes on to say:

Slips of paper were handed out to all the grade pupils and high school students, and without signing their names they were asked to set down the sum spent under each division. In the high school, 970 pupils re-

Williams Claims Hampton and Robertson-Cole "Enticed" H. B. Warner from Stage

John D. Williams, who produced he play, "Sleeping Partners," in which Henry B. Warner was starring when he left the company to go into pictures again, has filed suit in the Supreme Court against Jesse D. Hampton and Robertson-Cole for $100,000 damages.

Williams alleges that he had a contract with Warner by which Warner was to remain with "Sleeping Partners" during the "run of the piece," and that because the defendants, who are associated in the production and distrirbution of films "wrongfully, corruptly and maliciously" enticed Warner away the plaintiff had to discontinue his play and has been damaged $100,000.

The Robertson-Cole offices had no comment to make on the matter.

H. B. Warner is no longer on the Robertson-Cole program, having been shifted to Pathe by Jesse D. Hampton, his producer.

Censorship in Virginia

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Richmond, Va.—The expected state censorship bill was introduced before the General Assembly Friday. It is said to be the most drastic measure of its kind introduced in the state in its present form.

A few weeks ago when Jake Wells and Harry Bernstein were in town they stated that the situation in Virginia was well in hand.

It is feared that if Virginia adopts censorship the other Southern states might follow suit.

May Be Used by Famous on a Royalty Basis—Nothing Known Here

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—Because of the success of the prologue staged by Sid Grauman for "Behind the Door" it is reported locally that Grauman may become the originator of a large number of acts, prologues and interludes to be used in picture presentations over a large area, if he decides to accept an offer made to him within the past few days by Famous Players-Lasky, by which they agree, it is stated, to pay him large royalties for arranging these novelties for circuit purposes.

Local offices of Famous Players said they knew nothing of the idea.

In the Courts

Aywon Film Corp. has filed a bond for $7,000 in the Supreme Court and for that reason it has a right to exhibit the film, "The Log of the U-35" pending the trial of the suit by the C. B. Price Co. to restrain the exhibition of the picture on the ground that it has been "pirated" from a negative owned by the plaintiff. Justice Finch who heard the Price suit, refused the injunction on condition that the bond be filed.

Samuel Heitlinger filed a suit in the Supreme Court against the Empire City Film Laboratory for $12,000 damages. The complaint alleged that William Stoermer owned the negative of the picture. "The Law of the North Woods," and gave it to the defendant to be printed. Title to the negative has been assigned to the plaintiff but the defendant refuses to deliver. Heitlinger asks $3,000 as the value of the film and $9,000 because of lost profits due to the defendants acts.

Supreme Court Justice Platzek has granted the application of William Harris, Jr., and others as owners of the play "East Is West," for an injunction restraining Carlyle Blackwell from producing a film called, "East or West." The court said: "It is apparent that the two titles are so similar as to create confusion. Plaintiff's title is fanciful and so is defendant's. Of course there can be no monopoly in the use of such words as 'east' or 'west.' Anyone may use them as part of a descriptive title. But the fanciful combination 'East Is West' is entitled to protection against another fanciful title so near like it as 'East or West.'" The plaintiffs must give a bond of $5,000 to protect the defendants pending the trial.

Compson Productions

"Miracle Man" Girl Has Own Company with Unlimited Finance.

Betty Compson, whose sensational success in the part of "Rose," the girl in George Loane Tucker's production, "The Miracle Man," which was one of the events of last year, has organized her own company for the production of a series of elaborate special features.

Miss Compson, with her mother, left for Los Angeles yesterday afternoon, where she will produce. When seen for a moment before leaving, Miss Compson stated that following the success of Mr. Tucker's production, she received offers from practically every large distributor and producer, but after considering them all she decided to organize her own producing unit having been assured of unlimited finance because she felt that by controlling the entire detail of production and assuming all of the responsibility she would more easily be able to achieve the sort of special production which she desires to present.

Miss Compson stated she hoped to have her first special ready for release in the Fall. When asked concerning distribution since she felt that her first duty now was to make the best production possible, and she intended to concentrate entirely upon production for the present.

Albany—The four sub-committees of the Mayor's Conference met in executive session here yesterday.

Secretary Wililam P. Capes announced that a final stand on the matter will be made at a subsequent meeting which will be held in two weeks. At that time the reports of the committees and its stand as to the regulation of motion pictures and particularly as to censorsihp will be framed.

Northcliffe a Producer

Lord Northcliffe, owner of a number of the most prominent English newspapers and extensively interested in the publishing field in this country, is to enter motion pictures as a producer. This is believed to be the only reason for the forthcoming visit of W. G. Faulkner, motion picture editor of the London Evening News, a Northcliffe paper.

Mr. Faulkner sailed from Southampton on the Adriatic, due in New York on Sunday. He is generally conceded as being the highest authority and the most widely quoted man on motion pictures in Great Britain.

He will rest in New York for a few days and then journey to Los Angeles with his wife and daugther. On the return trip he will stop of at a number of cities and after another stay in New York will return to England. The entire trip will cover a period of several months.

New Housing Plan

John Miller, of Buffalo, has tendered a plan to the National Association for the centering of all film exchanges in New York in one fireproof building. His scheme has not as yet been acted upon, according to Secretary Elliott, of the National Association.

Miller proposes taking over the Printing Crafts Building, a thoroughly modern 26 story structure at 7th Ave. and 34th St., which is now held by the Government for post-war work. Miller would use the first 12 floors of the structure for the film exchanges and lease the rest of the building to commercial establishments. The Government is asking in the neighborhood of $4,000,000 for the building.

With the concentration of all the exchanges in one building it is figured that the necessity of erecting a building and possible friction with the Fire Department will be removed.

FRANK REICHER

AN APPRECIATION

By Chas. D. Isaacson

I have been thrilled. As a theatre-goer who has seen the best and worst and all that vast multitude of the mediocre mess in between, a thrill comes rarely; but when it appears, hits hard. The thrill was in the playing of Frank Reicher, whose impersonation of "Akim" in "The Power of Darkness" is the finest individual piece of acting I have seen in New York City.

"Akim" is a middle-aged peasant in Russia. He stammers and stutters and goes in circles whenever he speaks. He repeats himself and stumbles over his phrases.

"I mean- uh uh I mean what you call it it's uh—it's filthy—that's what it is—it's—what you call it—it's—It's filthy—that's what I mean, filthy!"

Akim is caught in the mesh of a net of circumstances. His son has wronged a girl and is loved by a wealthy peasant woman. Akim wants the boy to repair his errors and marry the orphan he deceived.

You would think that Akim is an unpleasant character, that his presence and his peculiarities irritate. They do; but through the stumbling and weak-expression, a soul of Godlike presence shines in unmistakable purity. In the pent-up walls of Akim's crude, weak speech, Akim's mind and spirit struggle to free themselves. What is wrong must be righted. There is no other way that he will recognize. His is a single-idea mind, and he thinks clearly and in a straight line, even if his expression is not so eloquent.

I speak of the thrill of Akim, as Reicher has portrayed this Shakespearian-like creature. The company which plays "The Power of Darkness" is splendid; but it is Frank Reicher who towers in strength over his excellent co-workers. The play is not one with a star—Akim was not given the star place, but Reicher's portrayal makes the role one which actors forever and ever will want to place in their repertoire, alongside Hamlet, Richard the Third, Othello and Rostand's Cyrano. As you watch the first act, this bearded man enters the room, and says nothing for a few moments. Despite the quiet manner of him you know that there is a thrill. You have not been prepared for it by knowing that Reicher is a star—by electric lights or newspaper announcements. It's all in the man. Then, when he speaks out in his low, slow, stammering words, he takes a comparatively small part in the conversation. You are held in a vise. From this on to the end of the play, Akim-Reicher is in your mind's eye and dominates the story.

In the second act Reicher has a scene that is already immortal. His son has not followed his advice—he is now husband to the wealthy peasant widow. Flushed by liquor and money and a love affair with his stepdaughter, the son of Akim is a filthy spectacle. Akim needs money—his horse is sick. But when he sees the ways of his son's life, he refuses to stay in his house.

Can you think of him, "I can't—I can't—stay—forgive me I mean it's not right not right -Nikita—in the house—it's what you call it—I mean—you are living a bad life, Nikita—bad—I'll go."

How Akim, through the course of the action, brings his son to confess and die is a piece of work so eloquent and moving that I feel myself a cad and a boor not to go out and shout of it from every platform from which I speak. The play left me weak in my chair.

Frank Reicher is a young man—he is comparatively little known in New York beside some better advertised players; but by Heaven, he is a creature henceforth I love. And if Frank Reicher, through this marvelous creation he has endowed with immortal life, is not acclaimed by the world—by the audiences, by his colleagues and rivals, then it may well be said that art is dead. But because I know that art lives and that the people will crown the aristocrat of achievement, I realize that Frank Reicher is destined to universal recognition. His "Akim" is America's finest theatrical achievement!

FRANK REICHER is Director General of Lester Park and Edward Whiteside Productions, and is attracting a great deal of attention because of his splendid handling of "Empty Arms." He has just finished cutting another Park-Whiteside film, and is now at work on the third of the series.

26 A Year

Quimby Places Output of Associated Exhibitors at That Figure.

Fred C. Quimby, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., stated yesterday that the possible output for his organization would be 26 pictures a year.

While Mr. Quimby refused to be definite on the subject, he clearly intimated that an organization the size of Associated Exhibitors would not have gone ahead on its plans unless definite sources of production had been assured. The productions will be "big league" in every sense of the word, said Quimby.

The various franchise holders will control the distributing rights in their respective territories, while the exhibitors, who are a party to the scheme will pay a certain percentage of the rental price for the various films. For example, if there are 300 exhibitors who are interested in the franchise for Greater New York the percentages will be graduated on a basis of 300, calculating, of course, on a total of 100 per cent. The individual franchises held by the parent company will be elastic enough to allow the entrance of new members when found necessary.

Quimby stated that the new organization plans to supply exhibitors with everything they need: projection machines, seats for theaters and all sorts of accessories. In selling the Associated Exhibitor product, salesmen will be dispensed with for by the original agreement entered upon by the sub-franchise holders the sale of the product is assured before actual operation is begun.

It is understood that the new building on West 45th St. which Pathe has taken over from the architect's blueprints,, will house the Associated Exhibitors.

More Millions

They were talking about millions again yesterday. Some film man over at the Astor stated that "Ben Hur" had been sold to a group of Indiana Hoosiers for $1,000,000.

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Oklahoma City, Okla.—Pledging themselves to a voluntary censorship against so-called "bandit films" in which are depicted the careers or alleged careers of ex-convicts and outlaws, but opposing any legislation by Congress on this subject for fear will it will seriously affect the freedom of the screen,, the annual convention of the Theater Managers and Owners' Association of Oklahoma adjourned yesterday following a two days' session at the Lee Buckins Hotel.

The resolution approves the sentiment of the State Bar associations in going on record against "bandit pictures."

A long telegram was sent to Senator Gore and Congressman Harrell, who have introduced the bill on the subject in the House and Senate at the request of the State Bar Association, asking that they withdraw the pending legislation and pledging the motion picture exhibitors of the state to carry out the remedial measure proposed in the bills.

In the Courts

In a suit of the McConnell Printing Co. against the Cinema News Publishing Co. for $1,006 balance due for work, labor and materials furnished up to last May, a judgment by default for $1,060 has been entered by default.

The Phoenix Feature Film Corp. has filed suit in the Supreme Court against Harry Grossman to recover $5,380 alleged to be due on an agreement by Grossman to pay $6,000 for the plaintiff's film exchange at 131 Columbia Ave., Boston.

Charles Memberson, president of the Foursquare Pictures, has testified before trial in the Supreme Court in a suit of Carl L. Wettig for $50,000 damages because his picture was used without his consent and he was falsely depicted as a co-conspirator in plots to blow up munition and supply ships in New York Harbor, in the film, "Eagle Eye," based alleged facts supplied by Chief Flynn, of the Secret Service. He testified that the picture was distributed by the Wharton Co. and said that the books of the defendant do not show any dealings with Chief Flynn.

The Parex Film Corporation has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to the suit of Asa B. Kellogg, as trustee in bankruptcy of the General Film Contracting Co., for an amount alleged to be due. The answer admits that it has paid $10,000 on account, and in making a counter claim against the plaintiff for $9,000 alleges that it made no further payment because the audit of the General Film's books is incomplete and defective and did not include the receipts from five pictures delivered to the plaintiff's bankrupt corporation to be exhibited in Canada. It is alleged that the General Film got $10,000 from these films, of which $8,000 is due the defendant and that the films, which are worth $1,000, have not been returned.

Hollywood—Charles E. Whitaker, scenario writer, has sued Harry I. Garson, producer, to recover $4,500 which he alleges is still unpaid for "continuities" of four stories given him by Garson for adaptation. When the complaint was filed an attachment was issued against money deposited in a local bank in Garson's name. According to the complaint, the stories were "Michael and His Lost Angel," "Elevating a Husband," "the Forbidden Woman" and "The Soul of Raphael."

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Elmira, N. Y.—The fact that Will Rogers wears shabby clothes in "Jubilo," enabled E. H. Thompson, manager of the Amusu, to secure additional publicity for that production. He arranged a tie-up with Reid and Winner, whereby they placed several stills in their window showing Rogers in his rags, with a sign reading, "Will Rogers could get a new suit here at a reasonable price. This is Will Rogers in 'Jubilo' showing at the Amusu. He didn't buy this suit at Reid and Winner's." They supplemented that with a quarter page layout in all local papers showing a cut with the leading lady handing Rogers some money, the accompanying words being "This will get you a new suit at Reid and Winner's 33 1/3 per cent discount sale." Mention was made of the fact that the production was being presented at the Amusu.

Omaha, Nebraska—A special section of 10 pages in the Sunday Bee, with the front cover an advertisement for "Everywoman," the material being from the press book for that picture, helped put that production over at the Rialto. There were also several advertising tieups, one unique one being that of a dentist who advocated good teeth as an asset to beauty. It all helped pack the theater.

W. C. Herrmann, office manager of the "Big U" exchange,, went to Atlantic City yesterday for a 10 day vacation.

Griffith's Ideas

Prepares Talk on Censorship Before Virginia Legislative Committees

In explanation of the industry's stand on the proposed censorship bill now pending in the State of Virginia, D. W. Griffith prepared the folowing remarks for delivery before the Joint Committee representing the Senate and Assembly of the Commonwealth:

"Censorship is un-American because it is founded on the principle of autocracy—the right of a few to direct the mass. Every American precept is in opposition to it. Every time America has shed blood it has been to overthrow tyranny and Americans will not countenance tyranny of thought any more than they will countenance tyranny of physical power.

"Censorship is misguided because it defeats its purpose by robbing the screen of its virility, thus inviting the need of further censorship over the spineless milk and water product that will follow it.

Censorship is senseless because it puts into the hands of small-calibered politicians the right to edit our supply of thought and our means of recreation. As well permit these politicians to go into our libraries and re-write Shakespeare or the Bible.

"Censorship is unjust because it restricts a great industry by building trouble-barriers as numerous as our states and cities. It is an unwarranted tax upon an industry—and the maze of hazards it erects discourages the spirit of adventure and originality without which the industry cannot exist. It is an assurance of screen mediocrity.

"Censorship is dangerous because it is the beginning of the encroachment upon the freedom of the press. As well permit an appointee of a City Council to sit at the desk of a newspaper editor and delete the copy not to his liking.

"Censorship is untruth because it conceals truth. No film can be great that does not mirror life, and life is made up of joy and sorrow; sweetness and bitterness; lights and shadows; good and evil comedy and tragedy.

"Censorship is artless because it would rob our films of the very qualities that make Shakespeare's works immortal—the contrast of vice and virtue, an essential law of drama.

"Censorship is unlawful because the screen is a form of expression and the right of free expression is guaranteed under the Constitution.

"Censorship is needless because the exposure of an indecent or immoral film is a misdemeanor under all laws which now exist and comes under the proper police regulation of every community.

"Censorship is intolerance, and intolerance murdered Socrates; crucified Christ: put Columbus in chains; martyred Joan of Arc; smashed the first printing press; produced witchcraft and made Europe a shamble.

"Censorship is reaction because it substitutes the judgment of the narrow partisan critic for the judgment of the artist and creator.

"Censorship is unprogressive because it hampers the full development of the world's newest and one of its most important arts—an art that cannot finally find itself without the free and unrestricted play of all its creative genius.

"Censorship is unfair because, on the plea that it protects youth from seeing those things which the adolescent mind should not know, it robs the adult majority of those things which ought to be shown. Better to keep the children out of the picture theaters. Children do not go to the legitimate theaters.

"Censorship is un-Virginian because it is antagonistic to your State motto which calls for the destruction of the tyrant because it makes a lie of the principles of liberty for which Washington fought; which Thomas Jefferson wrote into our fundamental laws, and for which Patrick Henry pleaded when he said: 'Give me Liberty, or give me death.'"

Western Capital

nificant because it shows that financial interests at the production center are awakening to the possibilities offered for investment in the picture industry. It has often been predicted that once Los Angeles capital becomes thoroughly interested in the film business it may result in swinging the financial center of this great industry from New York to the present film capital where more than 80 per cent of production is now carried on."

The new company plans to establish its own exchanges in the 26 key cities of the United States. The sales end of the business will be handled by H. J. Roberts, formerly with the sales department of Fox film. Ward Lascalle, formerly connected with the directorial staff of Mary Pickford, will be director-general of the new concern. There will be four companies operating before the end of March, announced Mr. Lascalle. Earle D. Shanks, formerly connected with the accounting and financial department of the Mary Pickford Co. will act as business manager for the new company. Before becoming identified with Special Pictures, President Thompson was also connected with the Mary Pickford Co. as special representative for Miss Pickford at the New York office of United Artists.

The new concern will rent space for the present at one of the studios but plans are now being prepared for a studio of their own which it is believed will be well under way by the beginning of summer.

Oklahoma Managers

tions have not been shown in the State. The fact that they kept faith on the question of immoral films is pointed to as an indication that they will likewise ban the bandit pictures.

"The law proposed by Senator Gore and Congressman Harrell," said Ralph Talbot, president of the association, in discussing the action of the body, "would establish a dangerous precedent with reference to the freedom of the screen that might prevent the showing of even the purest type of pictures. It would also bar from the State productions such as are made by William S. Hart and other actors who essay Western roles. The exhibitors of the State will enforce the resolution adopted by us to the letter,, and any one who fails to do so will be dealt with by our association."

Talbot was re-elected president. Other officers are:—Morris Lowenstein, Oklahoma City, vice president; A. B. Momand, Shawnee, secretary; W. H. McCall, Oklahoma City, treasurer.

About 300 theater men attended the convention. This was the largest attendance in the history of the organization. Various film distributing companies had displays covering the entire sixth floor of the hotel.

It was announced that the Fox Film Corp., the Vitagraph Company and Select Pictures Corporation would soon establish branch offices in Oklahoma City. Practically all the other large companies now have offices here, and as soon as the three named have opened offices in the city Kansas City and Dallas will be entirely eliminated as distributing centers for Oklahoma.

Some Comment Regarding the New York Exhibitors' League Action Realtive to Prices for Pictures

There was considerable interest in the market yesterday over the attitude taken by Hiram Abrams, who, as noted exclusively in WID'S DAILY, commenting on the action of the New York State Exhibitors' League, said that an exhibitor could buy as he pleased and with no one to compel him to do anything else.

That the percentage problem entering into the sale of productions was part of the general idea behind the action of the state exhibitors was generally admitted, but many believed that as Abrams put it was probably the only answer available to a difficult question.

It is understood that Abrams also contends that few, if any of the state exhibitors are using much of the product of the stars identified with United Artists.

In a statement issued yesterday, however, Mr. Abrams made the following remarks, in part:—

"I go on record now with the promise that as soon as this company has a sufficient amount of product to warrant the organization that will be required, we will book our pictures throughout on a straight percentage basis and do away altogether with a guarantee or rental, except, insofar as a nominal deposit may be required as a binder or as evidence of good faith for the protection of playing dates.

"We are headed right for straight percentage."

The percentage question now being discussed at length in the industry was again taken up in view of the action of the state exhibitors. That a percentage basis might probably be the solution of the booking question was admitted, but the difficulty seems to be that few can agree on just what the percentage basis should be.

The exhibitors fixed March 9-10 as the date for the next state convention to be held in Utica.

Lesser in Los Angeles

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—The transferring of his headquarters from San Francisco to Los Angeles has been accomplished during the last few days by Sol Lesser. Since his purchase in connection with Gore Bros. of the First National Circuit for Southern California and Arizona Lesser has decided that the new interests can best be managed from this city, and has taken offices in the Brack Shops. He will still maintain an office in San Francisco, but his main offices will be here.

One of Lesser's interesting plans for the future is the making of Los Angeles as a distributing center, instead of permitting all of those honors to fall, as heretofore, to New York. His scheme has met with marked approval from a large number of motion picture interests.

Lesser and the Gores recently purchased the Kinema Theater, which will undergo extensive improvements in the near future. They are also planning to erect another large theater on Broadway, but have not yet chosen its exact location.

Another for Grauman

Jack Calicutt has arrived in Los Angeles from San Francisco to take the management of the Kinema, recently purchased by Lesser and Gore Brothers. Calicutt was former manager of Graumans' Million Dollar Theater here.

Zukor Acts

To Aid National Board of Review and Exhibitors in Fight on Censorship.

To help the National Board of Review, and also to assist exhibitors in the fight against official motion picture censorship, Famous Players-Lasky is taking steps to have the insignia, "Passed by the National Board of Review" carried at the beginning of all Paramount Artcraft pictures so that it will not fail to be seen when the pictures are shown in the theater.

Adolph Zukor has appealed to all exhibitors booking Paramount pictures to keep this approval in the film when it is shown.

It has been the custom in the past to append the National Board's approval to the end of pictures. Many exhibitors, failing to appreciate the importance of this approval, have been in the habit of eliminating this stamp from the picture. Thus when the picture is shown even though the picture has been approved by the National Board, it fails to let the people know that such approval has been given.

"I am moved to take this step," said Mr. Zukor, in explaining his action, 'because I am firmly convinced that the National Board of Review needs the backing of everybody in the business in the fight it is waging against official film censorship. All Paramount Artcraft pictures are approved by the National Board before they are released. This not only is a protection to us, but it is of immense benefit to the exhibitor showing our pictures.

"I wish to call the attention of exhibitors to the importance of carrying this approval on all their pictures. It behooves all exhibitors to co-operate with this board, because official censorship not only is vicious and un-American, but it also can do incalculable harm to the industry, as has been proved in those communities where censorship already exists."

Committee Kills Impending Measure —Called an Important Victory

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Richmond, Va.—The proposed censorship for Virginia was killed yesterday by the Committee on Moral Welfare.

This is regarded as exceedingly important. Many feared if Virginia passed the measure that it might have a strong influence on other bills in Southern states.

David W. Griffith, representing the industry, and the National Association led the opposition before the committee.

Secretary Elliott, of the National Association, was materially pleased when he was informed of the action over the long distance phone.

Storm Plays Havoc With Shipments —Statements from Companies

The storm which has tied up or delayed trains throughout the country has resulted in many cases in a delay in film shipments and many of the companies have been forced to undergo some inconvenience as well as the exhibitors.

Assistant Sales Manager Kent of Famous Players when questioned about the matter stated that as yet, that organization had been affected only slightly, but that there was no doubt that the train trouble would hit them later. At present Famous is using autos in numerous cases.

S. Harris of Goldwyn explained that to some extent, they were getting around the difficulty by shipping reels by parcels post, and that in four or five cases it had been necessary to substitute other productions for those booked.

Du Pont Man Now With Goldwyn —Talk of Changes Aired in Local Film Circles

Francis A. Gudger, it developed yesterday is now a vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures. Mr. Gudger was formerly vice-president of the Arlington Works, a Du Pont subsidiary, and an assistant director of the Du Pont Corp. during 1919.

The news developed considerable interest in film circles yesterday. It was rather generally conceded that Gudger was on the job to look after the Du Pont interests in Goldwyn as is said to be the case of H. D. H. Connick who resigned from a downtown financial institution to join Famous Players. Connick is chairman of the finance committee at Famous Players. Mr. Gudger, when reached on the telephone yesterday stated:

"Mr. Goldwyn wanted to strengthen his organization wherever he could in order to carry out the lines of expansion he has planned for Goldwyn Pictures. I was elected a vice-president at a director's meeting held the third week in January. If I can be of any help to Mr. Goldwyn, I am here to do it.

"The vice-president and others right down the line are his lieutenants and stand ready to carry out his plans."

Gossip current in usually well informed quarters had it that Samuel Goldwyn would devote all of his time in the future to production and Moritz Hilder, another vice-president would take over the sales end. Regarding that Mr. Gudger stated that Goldwyn would continue the general duties of president while regarding Mr. Hilder he said that he didn't think the statement was true.

Nat C. Olds took an important executive post in the advertising department this week.

Meanwhile it is understood that Maxon F. Judell who joined Goldwyn four months ago to organize a non-theatrical department has been let out.

Fair Entertainment Offered in Picture Based on Healing Through Faith

Peggy Hyland in "FAITH"
Fox

DIRECTOR .....Howard M. Mitchell
AUTHOR ..... J. Anthony Roach
SCENARIO BY .....J. Anthony Roach
CAMERAMAN ..... Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Fair picture based on the healing through Faith idea; starts off like a "Miracle Man" imitation but gets far away from it soon afterwards.
STORY.....Maintains an average amount of interest although several turns in the story are poorly developed.
DIRECTION.....Satisfactory in staging the action though no dramatic high-lights are touched.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Some very good
CAMERA WORK .....Straight shots
STAR.....If she had played in more serious vein much of action would have been more convincing.
SUPPORT ..... Average
EXTERIORS .....Some very pretty shots of sheep grazing; all are country-side exteriors.
INTERIORS ..... Suitable
DETAIL.....Scotch village atmosphere striven for very obvious.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Untangling of complications created by crabbed Scotchman and impostors by one who heals through Faith.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"Faith" is a picture offering a fair amount of entertainment which is centered around the healing through Faith idea. At the outset it looks as if the producers were attempting to work along the lines of "The Miracle Man" but once the main action is penetrated it gets far away from it. The picture never ascends to great dramatic heights and there are some turns in the story, such as the sudden reformation of McGregor, that fail to ring true due to the suddenness with which they have been developed. But all in all the story manages to maintain a fair degree of interest throughout.

In Scotland, Kent McGregor, a miser, who has ambitions to become connected with a noble family, lives with his niece Jean, who is in love with David, the shepherd. David's father, Adam Harden, school teacher, is also looked upon by the country folk of the village as a spiritual guide and his miraculous cures through faith have won him the love of all but McGregor.

In the city Meg Harper convinces an unsuccessful doctor, Kyle, that he can pass himself off as the long lost son of a titled Scatchman who once lived near McGregor. McGregor falls for the ruse and takes Kyle into his home, encouraging his attentions toward his niece. When Jean rebels, McGregor has David and his father cast into jail. He sets the date of the wedding of Kyle and Jean, but just before the unwilling bride reaches the alter she swoons.

Kyle and specialists from the city claim they can do nothing with her and so the now repentant McGregor summons Adam Harden who works her cure. McGregor overhears Kyle and Meg quarreling and has them arrested for the imposters that they are, while now he is only too glad to give his niece in marriage to David.

Peggy Hyland in the role of Jean would have made a better impression had she acted in a more serious mood. The rest of the cast headed by Edwin B. Tilton, Winter Hall, Parks Jones and Milla Davenport does good work.

It'll Get Over But You Don't Need to Shout About It

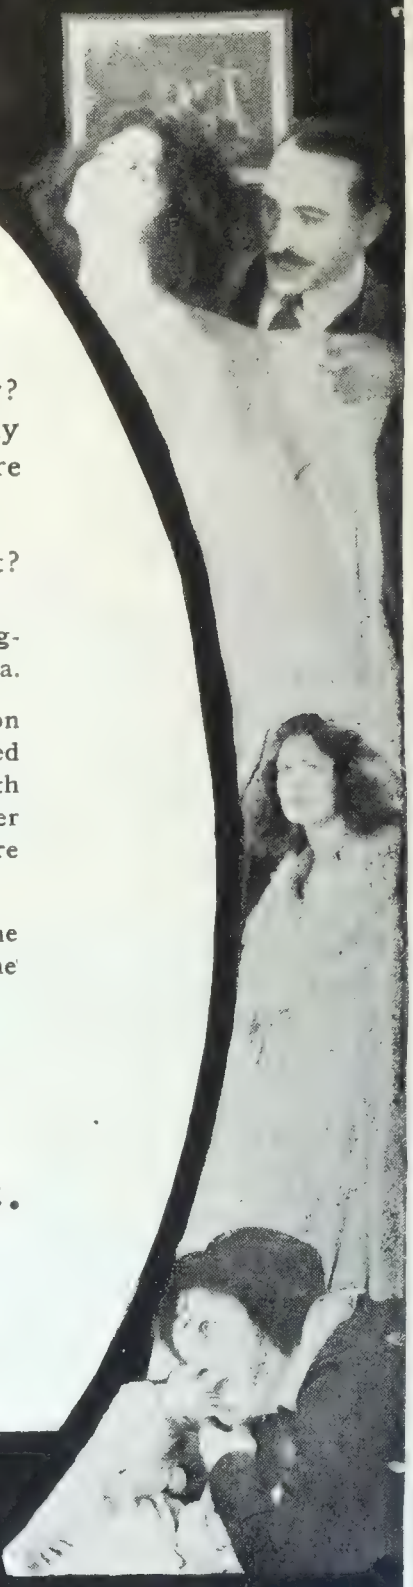
Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Here's a picture that will get over averagely but doesn't warrant the exhibitor singing its praise in superlatives. It's a fairly interesting story and although there is no real show of drama in it the idea is pretty and the action should interest.

Advertising arguments and readers should be centered around the healing through Faith idea and this can be done diplomatically so as not to cast the picture in the propaganda class. There's a universal interest in this form of religion and cure now and most people will appreciate seeing it no matter what religion they hold to.

Catch lines might follow the following style: "Specialists have given her case up as hopeless but there was one who held no university degree that could cure her. Who was he?" "Do you believe in healing through Faith and Love? See 'Faith'," etc. Musical features of the program could be arranged apropos of the Scotch locale of the story.

New Edition Ready



What is the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet anyway? Everybody in the industry is talking about it. They say that already "EMPTY ARMS" has gone over even before anybody has seen the film!

When am I going to receive my copy of the Packet? You certainly are keeping me on the anxious seat!

This is the gist of remarks made in telegrams, letters and long-distance 'phone calls we receive from all parts of North America.

We want to publicly apologize for the unfortunate condition which has made it impossible for us to fill all requests received for the Hundred Thousand Dollar Packet issued in connection with "EMPTY ARMS." The first edition was "taken up" almost over night, but the second edition is just off the press and copies are being sent to all those who have asked for them.

"EMPTY ARMS" is a great film. It is already the talk of the trade. It will be the most discussed film of the season from the viewpoint of the "fans."

There is something to the story—something to remember.

It is well acted, too!

Simple Little Narrative Spoiled by Too Rigid Detail

Mary Miles Minter in
"JUDY OF ROGUES' HARBOR
Realart

DIRECTOR ..... William Desmond Taylor
AUTHOR ..... Grace Miller White
SCENARIO BY ..... Clara Beranger
CAMERAMAN .....James C. Van Trees
AS A WHOLE.....Series of incidents that happen along with slight semblance of reality; detail laid on too thick.
DIRECTION.....Paid too much attention to details of the story and hardly any to the logical development of the theme.
STORY.....From the novel by Grace Miller White; simple country girl story spoiled by attempt to modernize it.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Splendid
LIGHTINGS ..... Always good
CAMERA WORK .....Many pleasing shots
STAR.....All her efforts registered but direction and continued implausibilities seriously handicapped her.
SUPPORT.....Some good types but nearly all the characters were obviously overdrawn.
EXTERIORS ..... Excellent rural locations
INTERIORS ..... Appropriate
DETAIL.....Made moments of minor importance stand out too strong in comparison to the really better bits.
CHARACTER OF STORY....Vaguely appreciable degree of suffering endured by little country girl.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

In its novel form "Judy of Rogues' Harbor" might well serve as a lesson for complaining little girls who have everything but think they have nothing, for after reading about all the hardships endured by poor little Judy, they might well consider themselves not so badly off. But as for transferring the misery of Judy to the screen, especially in its exceedingly tedious and detailed form, it will scarcely meet with the entertainment desires of grown-ups.

The producer has evidently adhered religiously to the text and in addition has endeavored to modernize the action by installing a company of Bolsheviks that use considerable footage but as far as the audience is concerned, this is unnecessary and superfluous.

Miss Minter is earnest and sincere in her effort to play the little country girl who stands the cruelty of an intolerant "Grandpap" because she is loyal and good, but folks will be kept so busy at the outset with a series of character introductions and no less than four distinct sequences, that it is hard for her to command any attention.

The brutality of the aged grandfather and of Jim Shuckles is done to a degree of exaggeration and implausibility. It is hard to believe that two men so strongly willed and so physically powerful as these two are supposed to be, would stand in awe and fear when Judy confronts them with a gun.

The story of Judy is entirely too long and complicated to be gone into in detail here but a sufficient idea of it may be gotten from the fact that after five reels of suffering and hard knocks judy learns her true identity. She is the daughter of a wealthy miner who died out west leaving a fortune which is stolen by a man now Governor of the state.

Through a series of coincidences, the Governor, the old man known to Judy as her grandfather and in whose care she had been placed by the Governor, her mother who believed her child dead, and various other characters connected in a minor way, are brought together, the complications clear up, and all works out nicely with Judy and the Governor's nephew falling in love with each other.

Use the Star's Name But Be Conservative in Your Advertising

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Admirers of Mary Miles Minter will be disappointed in the way she is handicapped in her effort to play the pure and sweet little country girl. The characters portrayed by her supporting company are so overdrawn and there are so many moments so absolutely implausible that she has very little opportunity to command the attention or sympathy intended by the author.

Grace Miller White's story may have made satisfactory reading matter but it is too lacking in actual situations and too full of mere incidents to make impressive screen material. The director has used considerable footage to get over each point and given entirely too much prominence to minor details.

If you play this feature rely on the name of the star and her work in "Anne of Green Gables" to get them in, but tell them what it's about and don't be surprised if your folks kick on having propaganda handed to them in their entertainment.

DIRECTOR ..... Wesley Ruggles
AUTHOR ..... P. G. Wodehouse
SCENARIO BY .....Not credited
CAMERAMAN ..... George Peters
AS A WHOLE.....Picturization of magazine story that offered few good film possibilities; production lacks vital comedy spark.
STORY.....Hasn't much of an idea back of it and depends too much on foolishness to get it over DIRECTION.....Director showed small comedy sense in the handling of various sequences; should have used more close-ups.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Good
CAMERA WORK ....Too great a distance between action and camera; many comedy points lost as a consequence.
STAR.....Doesn't build up his role by skilful play, gives rather listless impression.
SUPPORT ..... Average
EXTERIORS ....A number of good New York City views.
INTERIORS..... Very good
DETAIL ....All right
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Built around idea of idle son eventually making good only he doesn't do much to show it.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"Piccadilly Jim" is a comedy by intent but in reality illuminated only occasionally by good comedy scenes. There may have been good material in the story by P. G. Wodehouse but it certainly wasn't developed with any comedy sense during its transfer to the screen. It looks like a case of the adaptor and director having lost their eyes for comedy entirely. For here and there appear opportunities for comedy that have obviously been overlooked.

A big drawback to whatever humor there is in the film is the manner in which the camera was managed. The shots are generally too long and fail to permit the players to register comedy points when they try to. Certainly a comedy, above all other pictures, needs the trick of the closeup to help it along.

The story is a rather listless affair and without plot of any substantial consequence, attempts to get by with a lot of foolishness, only little of which registers. In fact one of the biggest laughs in the entire production comes when a fat boy's trainer lets loose on the punching bag and sends it sailing across the room to connect with the lad's face, spreading pie all over it incidentally. And when an old gag like this is the outstanding feature in an intended polite comedy it's general character can best be imagined.

What little plot there is tells of how Jim Crocker, American, is making a fool of himself in London by his various escapades. He overhears Ann Chester, his American cousin by marriage, giving her candid opinion of him and decides to go back to the U. S. A. and see if he can't make good.

He meets Ann on the boat and poses under another name. In New York he is unable to find work but at length enters his aunt's household posing as his true self to be near the girl. There is then introduced a lot of footage about Jim's intention to kidnap Ann's lazy, fat brother and a bogus Lord is also brought into the action, intent on stealing a powerful explosive that another member of the Chester "household" has invented and which proves, ultimately, to be no explosive at all.

Owen Moore might do a lot better under more tasteful comedy direction. As he appears here he is rather colorless. Zeena Keefe brings prettiness and animation to the role of Ann Chester but is unable to get very far with it. The rest of the cast is commendable.

Not Much to Talk About Offered in This Production

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Piccadilly Jim" is somewhat disappointing. There is evident a sincere effort on the part of the producers to turn out something good but certainly the task has been beyond them.

That the adaptor and director failed to take advantage of the comedy in the original story or failed to supply their own comedy if it was lacking in the original work, is a fact that becomes more and more apparent as the picture progresses. Owen Moore, however, while cast in a light role, is fairly well known and you can play him up.

Catchlines can be used along this idea: "See how an American makes good after being dubbed 'Piccadilly Jim'."

Another Automobile Comedy; Worthy of Its Title

Wallace Reid in
"DOUBLE SPEED"
Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... Sam Wood
AUTHOR ..... J. Stewart Woodhouse
SCENARIO BY .....Clara G. Kennedy
CAMERAMAN ..... Alfred Gilks
AS A WHOLE....Good breezy light comedy showing off star to advantage as comedian.
STORY.....Strikes a pretty fast pace throughout and maintains interest well through capable treatment of novel comedy idea.
DIRECTION.....Very good; seems to have derived the utmost from material provided.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... Plain and good
CAMERA WORK .....Very good; automobile stuff handled evenly and advantageously.
STAR.....Is in his element here both in comedy and romantic sequences.
SUPPORT.....Wanda Hawley makes hit; great comedy between Theodore Roberts and Tully Marshall.
EXTERIORS .....Pretty country and Los Angeles stuff.
INTERIORS ..... All that could be desired
DETAIL ..... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Hero, mistaken for tramp, afterwards impersonates himself and concludes the romance and plot happily.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,144 feet

"Double Speed" is a corking good comedy and fits Wallace Reid with a role entirely suited to his capabilities as a romantic actor and a light comedian. The plot is rather thin in spots but they certainly have kept the action at double speed throughout the picture and what with the rather original story idea and the comedy-thrill provided by the automobile chase during which the lovers are married, the subject stands as one to be spoken of only in terms of praise.

The star appears as "Speed" Carr, motoring across the continent, to attend to his estate which is in charge of his uncle in Los Angeles. Camping out one night tramps are attracted to his fire and the next day when "Speed" comes to he finds his car, tent, clothes and money all gone. The climax of this sequence is good for a great big laugh as they show "Speed" stretched on his cot the only thing left him by the marauders. He doesn't discover his loss until he awakes.

"Speed" gets a lift to Los Angeles and borrows some clothes, but the bank of which his uncle is vice-president refuses to recognize him. As uncle is out of town things look black for "Speed." However he finally gets a job as chauffeur to Sallie McPherson, daughter of the president of the bank, driving his own car that the tramps had sold to her. McPherson is anxious to locate "Speed" and entertain him before his uncle returns as he is dickering with some investments with uncle that will be helped by such action.

At length when uncle is due back in town and no "Speed" has appeared, McPherson persuades the chauffeur to pose as "Speed," as his uncle hasn't seen him for many years. Thus "Speed" poses as himself, wins Sallie's love, marries her and then finally reveals his true identity.

There is some fine comedy play between Theodore Roberts and Tully Marshall, as the uncle and bank president respectively, and there are innumerable touches throughout that go to show that the fellows who made it certainly had their comedy senses about them. This is all the more praiseworthy as "Double Speed" is the first feature work of author, scenarist, director and cameraman.

Wanda Hawley appears opposite the star while others are Lucien Littlefield and Guy Oliver.

A Good Comedy That Ought To Make Good Anywhere

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is a comedy that should please generally. It's fast, clean, full of pep and written around an original idea. While it may not measure up to "The Roaring Road" in exciting values, still the laughs come thick and fast, and all in all it fills the feature bill nicely. If you were one of the lucky ones that played "The Roaring Road," "Double Speed" ought to attract all the better. For mention that it is another "automobile, romantic comedy," similar to "The Roaring Road" will attract many of the people who enjoyed the previous release.

Reid is exceedingly popular as a comedian and in the present instance he is very well supported. Most crowds know the names of Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts and Tully Marshall. Use them. A good publicity angle lies in the fact that "Double Speed" is the initial feature work of director, author, scenarist and cameraman.

EXTERIORS.....Very few and plain
INTERIORS.....Color combination of settings very poor; backgrounds obtrude themselves into action.
DETAIL.....Film shows poor cutting and editing; at times very hard to follow.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Man who believed money was everything learns that love is the real power.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

All that "The Strongest" has to distinguish it from a run of very poor melodramas is the name of its author, Clemenceau, who proved himself the great war leader of France. His book, from which this is derived, may be good reading, and certainly one can't blame Clemenceau for the many faults of the picture, but they are present in abundance and the ultimate impression created by the picture is one of extreme disappointment.

In the first place the action, particularly in the early reels, skips over years and important events with confusing rapidity. A baby is born to Claire Harle, the mother dies and the infant grows into a beautiful girl, Claudia, all in the space of two or three subtitles with a few scenes thrown in for good measure. After that the action progresses without such great leaps in time, but it still is choppy and pretty hard to follow owing to the sudden ending of various sequences when seemingly incomplete.

Claudia's father, rich, is ambitious to bring a title into his family and encourages the attentions of a bogus count toward his daughter. She is in love with a young American who is encouraged by Henri, Claudia's god-father. Things come to a head when workers in Harle's factory kidnap Claudia when their demands for a raise have been refused. Henri goes to her rescue, but is shot and killed. The bogus count is revealed in his true colors by a detective, but the count's parting shot at Harle is to show him a letter proving that Claudia is really Henri's daughter. The lovers are united, but Harle returns to his mansion, a broken man.

The brightest spot in the picture is Renee Adoree, who appears as Claudia. She is an exceptionally beautiful young woman and shows promise. Of the rest of the cast Harrison Hunter as Harle is the best.

Another Case of Good Advertising Possibilities Not Backed Up

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Naturally the name of Clemenceau will attract many people to see "The Strongest," and if the exploitation is handled rightly, the picture ought to be a big winner from the standpoint of the box office. But here's another case of fine advertising possibilities not being backed up by the real goods in the entertainment line. It's pretty certain that the majority of folks are going to find the first part of the picture exceedingly hard to follow, while the latter reels evince so much choppiness that no thread of interest is very well sustained.

But what will probably be noticed more than any of the picture's faults is the acting. It is obvious that some of the sharp cutting was necessary to terminate over-drawn characterizations of many of the players. But even this method of cutting, a fault in itself, has not remedied the acting and there are many people that are going to laugh outright at the performances given in all seriousness.

Thus the exhibitor is up against the proposition of playing a picture that will probably draw big but which will be as big a disappointment to most audiences.

"It takes a mighty good screen actress to make me cry," a lot of exhibitors will say. Granted, but see Marguerite De La Motte in "The Sagebrusher."

"Roy Stewart's fine in big outdoor pictures, but I can't picture him being romantic." Some will say that. Well, see him in "The Sagebrusher."

And as for Noah Beery: This fine actor just gets your heart so soft and sentimental in "The Sagebrusher" that you find it hard to keep from swallowing your Adam's apple.

Not Enough Plot to Link Comedy and Human Interest Scenes Together

INTERIORS .....Appropriate

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Cowboy, refused by girl he loves, makes a man of his rival who is victim of whisky, that the girl may be happy
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"Water, Water Everywhere" is way behind the running when matched against Will Rogers' previous Goldwyn picture "Jubilo." That the producers have endeavored to make a picture of a similar type to that successful release is quite evident in the treatment accorded various scenes and in the character portrayed by the star, but "Water, Water Everywhere" fails to maintain the interest in any sort of a connected fashion due to an episodic plot, if such it may be called. There are flashes of comedy here and there and some nice human interest sequences but on the whole the picture will be found lacking because of the absence of sustaining fundamentals.

Will Rogers appears as Billy Fortune, a cowboy, in love with Hope Beecher, daughter of a pioneer of the old west. She, however, favors Dr. Ben Morgan, Billy's best friend, an unfortunate victim of drink. Thus this plot thread centers about Billy's ultimately successful efforts to make a man of his rival that the girl he loves may be happy.

Rather loosely connected with this line of action is the comedy evolved from the efforts of the women of the western town to make the place dry. There is one excellent comedy sequence showing Billy "sparking" Fay Bittinger, leader of the drys, in an effort to win her over to the wet side. Fay has had four husbands and is on the lookout for another. The scenes are splendidly played by Rogers and Lillian Langdon.

And still another plot thread concerns one Lyman Jennings Jordan, the imported leader of the drys, and Hope's young sister. Jordan turns out to be a hypocrite and they catch him receiving a shipment of whisky marked as books. Later he attacks the girl and Billy pulls the rescue stunt.

While the affair between Hope, Billy and the doctor is emphasized slightly above the other lines of action, it does not bear sufficient weight to dominate the picture. And as the dry-wet comedy is not tied up to it very well the production shows as rather disconnected and episodic.

Rogers gives of his best in his few opportunities and receives commendable support from Irene Rich, Wade Boteler, Rowland Lee, Marguerite Livingston, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Miss Langdon.

It's a Good Puller But Doesn't Give Proportionate Satisfaction

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This certainly is a very fine picture from the box office angle and it will very likely pull big crowds owing to the general timeliness of its title and the fact that "Jubilo," the star's previous release scored so heavily. And given a congenial crowd an exhibitor will hardly receive any very strenuous kicks on it.

On the other hand "Water, Water Everywhere" is one of those pictures that will send an audience away a bit dissatisfied, because of the defects as regards the plot mentioned above. They may not be able to put their fingers on the wrong spots but at the same time the feeling of unfilled expectations will be there.

That the picture has a certain degree of merit is not to be denied and Rogers will doubtless make an impression. An exhibitor won't damage his reputation for meritorious photoplays by showing it and at the same time he won't improve it to any great extent.

Sure-Fire Situations and Wonderful Subtitles Put This Over

"WHAT IS YOUR HUSBAND DOING?"
Thomas H. Ince Prod.—Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... Lloyd Ingraham
AUTHOR ..... George V. Hobart
SCENARIO BY ..... R. Cecil Smith
CAMERAMAN ..... Charles Stumar
AS A WHOLE.....Should get over big with metropolitan audiences and generally gay crowds.
STORY.....Pretty slow in starting but derives some sure-fire comedy from general mixup of three husbands and as many wives.
DIRECTION.....Has handled main comedy sequences very capably.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Realistic
CAMERA WORK .....Some very effective shots
STARS.....Register very satisfactorily although not with same force as in first release.
SUPPORT.....Includes Walter Hiers who gets a number of laughs.
EXTERIORS ..... Very few
INTERIORS ..... Always fitting
DETAIL.....Some excellent illustrated and animated subtitles which together with clever wording get easily as many laughs as action.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Straight-laced may object some as majority of comedy is derived from heroine's jag.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,692 feet

Thomas H. Ince has scored again with his two young stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, and "What's Your Husband Doing?" a picturization of the George Hobart stage farce, registers some of the surest light comedy laughs seen since "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours' Leave," and registers them in bunches.

The comedy is too complicated to relate here in detail. Suffice it to say that the main comedy action takes place at a perfectly respectable road-house where Beatrice Ridley has hid herself to ascertain just what her husband does there every night. Beatrice is accompanied by her lawyer, Widgast, and Widgast's partner, Pidgeon, is with Ridley who is selling out his holdings in the place. To make matters a little more complicated both Mrs. Widgast and Mrs. Pidgeon are present for certain reasons.

Here are ingredients for a real comedy situation and Hobart certainly found a lot of laughs in it. These have been communicated to the screen in excellent style and the road-house sequence is one long series of real comedy moments. Much of the humor is derived from the efforts of Widgast and his partner to dispose of Beatrice who has imbibed too freely. These scenes touch the high lights of the comedy and are amplified by comedy subtitles.

There is another good comedy sequence in the court room on the morning after when Widgast and Pidgeon sit in judgment of their wives and the bewildered Ridley. The scenes are speeded up pretty well and are not allowed to take on the aspect of an anti-climax which they easily might.

It's a Knock-Out All Right, But One Sequence is Tricky

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Douglas MacLean and Doris May in
"WHAT IS YOUR HUSBAND DOING"
Thomas H. Ince Prod.—Paramount-Artcraft

Naturally the question uppermost in every exhibitor's mind who played "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours' Leave" is, does "What's Your Husband Doing?" attain the same high mark. The answer to this is a "no"—with reservations. The former picture was unlimited in its appeal. It contained no scene that could possibly offend the most saintly.

Before audiences considered as metropolitan and cosmopolitan, it will probably score just as big as did the previous release of MacLean and May. For barring a sluggish introductory sequence it sure brings the laughs thick and fast and it get over wonderfully well because your expectations are never disappointed.

If you play to a crowd not liable to take offense at the heroine's jag, then, "What's Your Husband Doing?" is another sure one.

Propaganda Preachment and Not Entertainment

Thomas H. Ince presents
"DANGEROUS HOURS"
Ince-Paramount

DIRECTOR .....Fred Niblo
SUPERVISED BY .....Thomas H. Ince
AUTHOR .....Donn Byrne
SCENARIO BY .....C. Gardner Sullivan
CAMERAMAN .....George Barnes
As a Whole.....Casts entertainment to the winds and spends six reels on anti-Bolshevik preachment.
Story.....Not a story; plants the Russian radicals and their red flag in America.
DIRECTION.....Effective in its mission to point out the dangers of Bolshevism.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Excellent
LIGHTINGS ..... All very clear
CAMERA WORK .....Distinctly good
PLAYERS.....Lloyd Hughes not wholly convincing as a "visionary"; types well chosen.
EXTERIORS ..... Suitable
INTERIORS.....Many representing hotbeds of anarchy.
DETAIL.....Spectacular bits effective; titles aim to thrill by words of patriotic elequence.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Youthful radical sees the fallacy of Bolshevik government and swears allegiance to his country.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... 5,571 feet

Now that the war is over and there isn't any excuse for producing pictures dealing with recruiting, Liberty Bonds or other phases of the war, the Bolshevik movement is coming in for more than its share of notoriety by means of the screen, the idea evidently being to show how wrong and irrational are the views of those woolly-headed, black bearded folks and to point out the danger of the seed if sowed on American soil.

All this has been vividly and realistically told in Thomas H. Ince's adaptation of Donn Byrne's Saturday Evening Post Story, "A Prodigal in Utopia." The picture, as far as production is concerned has been well done and gets over is "anti" idea with decision and unusual realism. In fact a flash back depicting the work of the disturbers in the Russian revolution, the destruction they wrought and their vile maltreatment and so-called "nationalization" of women in several scenes are rather offensive.

"Dangerous Hours" cannot be classed as entertainment for it is strictly propaganda. It would be unfair to the public to call it anything else. And it would seem to be a trifle too delicate a subject to deal with just at the present time when this form of government is actually in power in Russia.

The opening scenes show Paterson, N. J. during a silk mill strike, Lloyd Hughes reared in a quiet New England seaport town, is shown as the head of a band of idealists who swear to aid the strikers and to devote themselves to "the cause."

The only human bit is in connection with the self-appointed saviour's aged father who does not know his son's business in the city, and Barbara Castleton who manages the factory left her by her father and who was Lloyd's childhood sweetheart.

A sure 'nough "Bull" named Blotchi, arrives from Russia and adds fuel to the flame with his "superb" oratory and descriptions of injustice of governments. Barbara's men are forced to quit work in the sympathetic strike and Lloyd's band decide to make their first blow in the little Massachusetts village.

While Barbara is pleading with Lloyd to see the fallacy of his idea, two others of the conspirators arrive. Lloyd steps into an adjoining room and when he hears them place a price of $5,000 as a settlement, he begins to realize his mistake and in an effort to prevent his followers from carrying out their plans to destroy the factory Lloyd is seriously wounded.

The factory is bombed and Barbara injured but after the horror has subsided and Lloyd makes a dramatic avowal of his allegiance to his country, there is the expected reunion.

You Know What Your Folks Want and You Know What This Is

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It is perhaps a matter to be decided by personal opinion. Do you believe propaganda presented to the public by means of the moving picture screen effectively delivers its message or do you believe it fails to make the impression which the effort and expense should justify?

One thing is certain, however. And that is propaganda material does not come under the heading of, and should not be misrepresented as entertainment. Excruciating tortures and the ideals of certain peoples in such strenuous form are of no interest to a person looking for cheer or forgetfulness through the medium of the screen.

WD 2/8/20

Some Short Reels

"Daredevil Jack," Brunton—Pathe

Displaying the famous punch that won him the world's heavyweight championship, Jack Dempsey makes his bow before the motion picture fans in Pathe's newest serial. And how he does bowl them over, left and right! Time and time again he makes his way into the rendezvous of the various villains and on each occasion, he catapults himself into their midst, sends them merrily into the land of twittering birdies and rescues this fair maiden or that.

The story is ideal for the purpose. It possesses an element of mystery at the beginning to arouse interest, has clever complications and affords the star an opportunity to impress the fans. Technically it is up to the mark, the work of the cameraman being worthy of praise. The cast is capable and Dempsey is an imposing figure.

One may find in the second episode of the offering a slip. It winds up with the start of a football game, as the hero is about to boot the pig-skin, containing a deadly explosive in the air. To begin with, the plan is hardly possible, and then the departure of the referee as the contest is about to start leaves a flaw. Of course, the average serial patron will overlook it, for the beginning of a football game is always an impressive spectacle and has been filmed well here.

In penning the story, they saw to it that there would be two sets of evil-doers working toward the same end, but conflicting. And Dempsey, the college football star fights them both, single handed.

Robert Brunton who produced this certainly made the best of his opportunity. Frederic Chapin and Harry C. Hoyt wrote the story, Jack Cunningham furnished the scenario and W. S. Van Dyke directed. No cameraman is credited in the press book, but he also did his bit well.

Jack Dempsey will undoubtedly prove a drawing card, and since there is hardly any danger of anyone annexing his title for a good long while you will be wise to use this.

"The Night of the Dub," Paramount

This two-reel comedy featuring Ernest Truex is one of the most humanly funny that has been seen since the pictures in which the late Sidney Drew and his wife appeared. A welcome relief from slapstick, it puts forth a novel and clever plot in a highly laughable style and contains the sort of stuff that will appeal to all the 'brows, high and low, in creation. The main situation hinges about Truex's unintentional act in getting his employer, a Wall Street power, in a hole. He and his friends have purchased seats for a certain show on the very night that the Harvard alumni have attempted to buy out the entire house. When Truex arrives at the theater his employer attempts first to bully the tickets away from him but the little fellow, kissing his job good-bye, bargains with his boss for box seats for another show, taxis and a supper at Delmonico's before he sacrifices his coupons. The next morning he expects to be fired but instead is invited to the inside office by his boss who appreciates his nerve. Albert Payson Terhune, the noted magazine writer, is responsible for this bundle of laughs and it was most capably directed by John Joseph Harvey.

"Getting His Goat," Pathe

Nothing or at any rate, very little, that Snub Pollard has not done in his recent pictures is to be found in this one reeler. It has a fair-sized amount of creditable comedy business and just a suggestion of a story. The staging and screening of the affair has been done in the usual suitable manner employed in releases of this series. Most of the affair centers about Pollard's efforts to transport a goat home, and his experiences on the way. A colored youngster who has appeared in almost all of these comedies gives his usually good performance and the star works zealously enough.

"The Lost City," Selig—State Rights

Distinctly novel, finely photographed, staged remarkably well and generally appealing to the eye, this serial will beyond doubt prove a money maker. Unfortunately, it had to be judged by the seventh, eighth and ninth episodes, which made it rather difficult for the reviewer, but if the other parts of the offering are anything like those witnessed, the production merits all of the praise it can be given.

Juanita Hansen, starred in the picture, together with George Chesbro, who runs a close second to her in importance, is appealing at all times and Frank Clark also does well. The affair is generally elaborate and rich in sets, costumes and all else. Technically it is up to the desired standard and as far as the direction and story are concerned, little is lacking. Small matters may be overlooked. What places this above many other serials is the unusual spectacles the animals afford. Lions, tigers, jaguars, an elephant and others wander about and go through various stunts in a manner that will give the followers of this type of drama cause for enthusiasm. Grab it before others get ahead of you.

Pathe Review, No. 37

Scenes of Bassaco, Portugal, colored, the making of lenses, a portion devoted to 17 year locusts, the manner in which water power is used in France to melt steel and a dance of ancient Egypt, portrayed by Desiree Lubovska comprise this Pathe Review. It has been photographed in unusually good style throughout and the various parts of it are fairly clever. It ranks a bit above the average screen magazine.

"Passing the Buck," Hall Room Boy Comedies

Realism is lacking at times in this Hall Room Boy two reeler, but it has enough comedy business and situations that are novel to put it over. This time, the Hall Room Boys, Percy and Ferdie, are despatched by the owner of the store in which they are employed to hunt down a band persists in buying various articles with counterfeit bills. The passers of the fake greenbacks are four in number, two men and two women, and the boys disguised as girls attempt to bring them to justice. Some chase stuff and slapstick comedy results. As usual, there is something "different" at the finish, and the generally satisfactory average maintained will cause merriment.

"Balsing Over the Bounding Blue," Chester

Balsas, queer reed sailing vessels used in parts of South America, are depicted in this Chester travel reel. Much of the material deals with some of the ruins about Tiahuanaco, and about 100 feet are devoted to peculiar headwear. Although Balsas are shown in various stages of making, very much of the reel does not show them floating on the briny, as the aliterative appellation causes one to expect. Titled by Katherine Hilliker in her usual clever manner, and photographed by W. O. Runcie, the offering is a worthy one of its kind and should find room on more than a few bills. It is certainly out of the ordinary.

"The Rum Runners," Fox

Another Mutt and Jeff cartoon which has some clever material, but means nothing in particular and will depend on its different parts to provoke mirth, rather than upon any coherence of plot, or story to put it over. It does not rank with the best of these offerings, by any means, but will probably receive some booking. Shows the inseparable duo fishing and discovering some sort of a submarine liquor establishment, where much of the action takes place.

24 WD 2/8/20

Short Reels

"He Ain't Done Right by Our Nell," Fox

Not only is the title of this Fox Mutt and Jeff cartoon good for a hearty laugh, but most of the material included in the reel is of the sort that will make most any audience roll with mirth. Some folks may object to one or two bits in it, but few will be able to restrain the natural laughter that it will cause. There are any number of comedy bits in the production that are of merit. The portion during which the weeping of the audience floods the orchestra pit, the slides and applause, and other sections will meet with approval. Basically, the plot is not new, but the manner in which it is presented puts it in the hit class.

Screenics, No. 2, Chester

Elks, or as one of the titles explains, what should properly be called Wapiti deer, appear in goodly numbers in the opening section of this second issue of the Chester Screenics. Following the first part, is a set of titles making up a sort of tale by Ellis Parker Butler, who wrote the well-known "Pigs Is Pigs." Butler's remarks impress on one the idea that it is advantageous to capitalize his adversity, which is just his way of telling folks to make the best of everything. It's an optimistic tale with several laughs.

"The Simple Life," Chester

Suggested by the title of this is the idea that it is going to deal with the back to nature idea, but instead, it takes the spectator to South America—to the Andes Mountains where the people still live in a primitive manner. It shows the old way of weaving used, the slow and tedious process of making several large jugs, and the grass huts of the people. Closing is a portion devoted to a celebration in one of the cities, and the festival is rather peculiar. Commendable.

"The Prospector's Vengeance," Universal

This is just what its title suggests—a western melodrama of the old kind. Reeves Eason directed, and together with Henry Murray wrote the scenario. In producing the two-reeler, several characters who are appearing in "The Moon Riders," the Universal serial, play prominent roles, among them being George Field, villain extraordinary, and Mildred Moore. There is a certain crowd that likes this sort of stuff, that will sob at the shop-worn situations it includes, and will exult when the hero gets his revenge, choking the bandit chief to death, after sending the posse on the wrong trail.

"Blind Chance," Universal

Two more reels of the old melodramatic sort that they used to bill as features in the days of long ago, but which will be booked only in the small houses today. Few situations if any that are at all out of the ordinary are to be found in the piece which has one scrap that may make them hold their breaths, but which everyone will outguess if he has seen films before.

"Women and Animals in Algeria," Educational

Hand-colored productions appear to be much in demand at present, and Educational has turned out another selected from what it calls its Library de Luxe. It deals with Algerian women and animals (they put the two together even in the title) and for the greater part has been colored acceptably. As usual, the faces have been left as originally photographed most of the time, but the various types shown, and they include one or two shots of men, are interesting, as are those of the monkeys, and other animals. There is also a good bit showing the Chiffa River tumbling over some rocks.

"The Bedouins of Moab," Educational

Educational has an unusually interesting travel reel in "The Bedouins of Moab," which has been titled in fine style, and which should prove of interest because of the Oriental craze which has not yet died down. The wandering Bedouin tribes of the Holy Land, are dealt with in this subject, which includes many intimate scenes of the people, among which are a class studying the Koran, a sword dance of an unusual nature, for the swain who touches the heel of the girl wins her hand, the sacrifice of a sheep and the traders near the walls of Jerusalem.

"On Strike," Fox

Following the course so common now, Mutt and Jeff decide to go on strike in this Fox animated cartoon. Observing the ease and comfort of their creator, Bud Fisher (the reel includes several shots of the caricaturist), they decide to turn out their own production, which is a fizzle, and the failure of which causes them to return to the fold. The idea is novel and the offering should fit in on any program.

"Hungry Lions and Tender Hearts," Fox

In this Fox Sunshine two-reeler, there is not as much of the riotous as usual, and not much of a plot. It does, however, possess numerous incidents that serve to provoke laughter and will get it across in fine shape. The portion devoted to the efforts of Jack Cooper to play golf has some unusually funny stuff, the bit showing Cooper holing the pellet with a cue being a clever one. And there is much more that is up to the mark, especially in the part devoted to the lions. Booking this will add a creditable slapstick comedy to your bill.

"Monte Carlo," Prizma—Republic

Monte Carlo, world-famous gambling resort, and its famous suicide rock, whence jump the despondent mortals whose fortunes have been ruined because of a fascination for the roulette wheel or cards, suggests a scene of revelry, but in this reel, all is quite calm and peaceful. It is just an ordinary scenic of a small town and is not quite as meritorious as some of the other recent Prizma releases.

"Elmo, the Fearless," Universal

Parts of episodes 6, 7 and 8 of this serial may look just a bit stagey, and it is true that much is left to the credulity of the audience, but for excitement and suspense this is in a class with the best of serials. In episode 6 there is a novel sort of scrap under the surface of the ocean. Just how Elmo escapes is not explained, but the punch is in evidence and they'll take his rescue for granted. Torture devices of various sorts in a cleverly improvised den make up a large portion of the following episode and there is a finely filmed wreck when an automobile and locomotive traveling at a high rate of speed meet.

"The Coolie," Prizma—Republic

Lowly and despised, the Chinese Coolie, who labors from dawn to dusk for a few yen (whatever those are worth in American currency) has been filmed in this Prizma reel. Harold E. Horton who manipulated the camera has his troubles getting the material, and at times, apparently, encountered difficulties as far as securing proper lighting, was concerned. The closing shot, showing a parade of ricksha men, displaying their fantastic symbols and attired in the extravagantly colored garments of the Orient, is quite effective. A commendable reel.

Injunction Denied

Action Against "Tong Man" Brought in San Francisco Courts Fails

San Francisco, Calif.—Judge Fitzgerald denied the application for a temporary injunction brought against Sessue Hayawaka's "The Tong Man" by the Chinese Six Companies, a powerful Oriental association which sought to restrain the film on the ground that it misrepresented the actions and customs of the Chinese.

Robertson-Cole officials installed a projection machine in the court room over night and the Judge the next morning viewed the film.

Lee Sam Nam, editor of "Young China" an influential newspaper here stated that the Chinese who had seen the film declared it to be "a piece of spite work." He maintained that the film had been sponsored by the Japanese.

Judge Fitzgerald, in handing down his decision said:

"This is a picture that shows action of real life. There is nothing misleading about it. It is entertaining, gripping and instructive. I see no reason why the Chinese Companies disagree as to the theme of the film. Therefore, I will not allow the temporary injunction."

Asher Flatly Denies Report

A statement published in the current issue of a certain weekly trade paper to the effect that Mack Sennett is to make five special productions for release through Associated Exhibitors, Inc., upon the expiration of his Famous Players-Lasky contract, and "confirmed" by E. M. Asher, Sennett's personal representative, is emphatically denied by Asher.

"I never made or confirmed any such statement to a representative of the trade paper or to any one else," said Mr. Asher on Saturday. "Mr. Sennett has made no plans with Associated Exhibitors and, as far as I know, none of the Associated Producers (Big Five) has made any plans with that company."

Cutting Schedule

Famous Players Will Not Release 130 Features Promised When Season Opened

Just how many productions Famous Players will distribute during this season is problematic. In all likelihood, according to reports, the schedule of 130 features promised on Sept. 1st last, for the following 12 months will not be lived up to.

"In all likelihood," said an official of Famous Players, "it can be stated definitely that in the neighborhood of 110 features will be released. There may be more. To live up to the original schedule would have presented difficulties unexpected and not anticipated, especially in the matter of publicity and advertising."

A number of independent operators maintain that Famous will not distribute more than from 90 to 100 feature productions instead of 130 and that this will open the door to the bookings of independent productions from houses that anticipated filling their schedule with Famous Players product and Paramount-Artcraft specials. Several important representative producers and distributors claim to have already felt the effects of what they term a "cut down" of Famous and Paramount product and say they have already booked in houses which heretofore had been inaccessible for their product.

Damage estimated at $50,000 was done by fire yesterday morning at the Oliver stuidos, in East 48th St. The blaze was in the carpenter shop in the basement.

Barge Canal Film Ready

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Albany, N. Y.—For the purpose of stimulating interest in the inland transportation and also in order that merchants and manufacturers, might have full and complete knowledge of the improved canal system, Superintendent of Public Works, Edward S. Walsh has completed a motion picture of the waterways.

The pictures portray the principal features of the Barge Canal. Typical sections of the channel through the many rivers and lakes are shown, and the mammoth locks and movable dams.

The only conditions imposed are that the civic organizations arrange for the projecting apparatus, the screen and the operator.

Foreign Holidays

Select Issues List of National Holidays to Aid in Americanization Drive

Owing to the large number of aliens in various cities of the United States, Select Pictures has compiled a list of foreign holidays to aid exhibitors in the industry's drive for Americanism. Exhibitors, it is believed, may make some special appeal on these days for an unified Americanism, provided their audiences contain majorities or large minorities of the nationalities mentioned. The list follows:

Belgium, July 21, Independence Day (From Holland 1831); Czechoslovakia, July 6, Jan Huss Day; Denmark, June 1, Constitution Day (Signed 1849); France, July 14, Bastile Day (1789); Greece, April 7, Independence Day; Irish, Marh 17, St. Patrick's Day; Italy, Sept. 20, Unification Day; Norway, May 17, Independence Day; Polish, May 3, Constitution Day; Portugal, Oct. 5, Republic Day (1910); Jugoslavia, Jun 28, Kossovo Day (Battle in 1839) Sweden, Nov. 6, Gustavus Adolphu Day; Switzerland, Aug. 1, Federation Day.

SUNDAY SHOWS AND CENSORSHIP

During the absence of Gabriel L. Hess, chairman of the National Association Censorship Committee in Europe, there will not be another chairman appointed. The burden of the work will rest with the secretary of the committee.

There was some criticism aired on Saturday because of the absence of Mr. Hess at this time when matters of censorship importance are impending.

It was suggested that a remedial measure would have been to appoint a temporary chairman while he was abroad in order to maintain the efficiency of the committee at top notch.

Party Leaves for South Carolina

Mary Gray Peck, a member of the National Advisory Committee of the National Board of Review and R. K. Fuller, secretary of the National Association Censorship Committee left New York for Columbia, South Carolina on Saturday where the hearing of the proposed censorship bill will be held to-morrow.

Jake Wells of Richmond, Va. who was prominent in the fight conducted in his state will also go to Columbia to attend the hearing.

P. A. Powers Offers A Few Thoughts

Says American Producers Must Sell Abroad Regardless of Exchange or Foreign Producers Will Step In.

P. A. Powers, of Universal, has something to say. When asked for a statement regarding the outlook for the industry he proceeded to make plain a few ideas, to be found below, many of which will probably cause some people to "sit up and take notice."

Here is what P. A. has to say:—

You ask me what I think of the future of the motion picture business. I am sorry that you ask me this question just now, as I am rather pessimistic as to the immediate future of the business. However, as there is enough optimism in this business to offset it, you might just as well know what I really think and of what I am convinced.

The facts which have presented themselves to me in the last six months have convinced me that the motion picture industry in the United States is going to be up against a tough time, and apparently the large factors in the industry do not realize what is in store for them, or do not want to.

Films Get Priority

Mayor's Ordinance Does Not Effect Mayor's Ordinance Does Not Affect

The F. I. L. M. Club of New York, composed of the exchange managers in the metropolitan district began to get busy yesterday morning with the result that the shipments of films are placed in the same category with the newspapers and for that reason will not suffer any delay in delivery to exhibitors, according to schedule.

H. H. Buxbaum, chairman of the Grievance Committee of the F. I. L. M. Club who is manager of the local Famous Players excnange was in conference with Capt. Cooper of the Telegraph Bureau of the Police Department and as a result of his efforts the drastic order regarding curtailing of truck and auto movements was removed, so far as the film business was concerned.

New Serial Combine

Eastern Producers Plan Amalgamation—Separate from Burston's Scheme.

It is understood that a merger of the leading serial producers in the East is now under way with four already lined up to join in the deal.

The merger closely resembles that announced by Louis Burston on the coast a short time ago, but is a distinct unit in itself. The combined producing power of the parties to the merger will result in a supply of serials to the exhibitor the entire year without interruption.

Must Sell Abroad

For the past four years, or since the war started, the motion picture industry in the United States has been blessed with unprecedented prosperity. Manufacturers have been able to secure unheard of prices for their productions both in America and throughout the world. This condition was due to the fact that European competition was entirely wiped out and we had practical control of the world's markets at our prices during the war. This does not mean that the industry as a whole has benefited by this condition, but the artists and writers have benefited by it to a very great extent, as you very rarely hear now that the motion picture industry is not paying the writers anything for the "children of their brain." They are getting now, and have been in the past, colossal prices for the picture rights for stories. The artists have also materially benefited by the conditions which have existed for the past four years and their salaries have increased by leaps and bounds.

There has been keen competition among the producers for stories and artists; prices have been paid which have been startling to the general public. That was entirely due to the fact that we had the world's market and receipts from the product from the entire universe.

Foreign Buyers Bankrupt.

Since the cessation of hostilities, conditions have changed United States and the European exchange to such an extent that foreign buyers at the present time are unable to fullfill their contracts as they could during the war when the exchange was at par. And in endeavoring to fulfill their obligations, foreign buyers have practically bankrupted themselves, with the result that they are now unable to purchase American pictures at wartime prices and pay for them in dollars, with the consequent result that American producers find themselves with an accumulation of productions which they are unable to market in foreign territories. This condition will continue to get worse instead of better, and unless the American producers are satisfied to accept foreign currency for their productions they will force the foreign buyers into the production of pictures, which they had suspended during the war, and the American producers will find themselves up against that competition.

To meet this future competition, it will be impossible for the American producers to continue paying the colossal salaries to artists and the phenomenal prices to authors for their services and stories, although they continue to do so notwithstanding the facts that I have stated. Only last week I heard of a story which was sold in the neighborhood of $200,000, and in view of the many contracts which the American producers have entered into with stars and authors, they will find it a very difficult proposition to contend with. It will result sooner or later in considerable embarassment in the industry.

As a general thing, men in this business do not want to look cold facts in the face. They live on optimism and any other atmosphere does not tend to make them happy.

Warnings Unheeded.

I have noticed in the trade papers during recent months several notices of warning from men who make it their business to sell pictures in foreign territories, but due to the fact that some of these men's names do not appear daily in public print, their warnings evidently receive very little attention and the game goes merrily on.

Activities in the production centers still continue without any thought; extravagances of directors and stars are the order of the day. The business has not benefited, as I stated before, by the prosperity hich this country has enjoyed for e past four years, as producers ıve put nothing in reserve to meet e situation which is apparent in the ımediate future. The result is that -day the cost of pictures that are the making is based on world-ide receipts when they should be ısed only on the revenue to be de-ved from the United States. Smith Suing Chadwick

Litigation Involves "Unchastened Woman" for Foreign Territory.

Papers in an action filed in the Supreme Court by Guy Croswell Smith against Isaac E. Chadwick were served upon the latter by Seligsberg, Lewis & Strous, attorneys for the plaintiff.

The case involves the sale to Smith of "The Unchastened Woman" for all foreign territory outside of the United States, Canada, Norway, Denmark and Sweden.

In the petition filed by Smith's attorneys it is charged that the sale was made under a false representation in that the original contract was signed by Isaac E. Chadwick as vice president of the Rialto de Luxe Prod., a supposed corporation which it was claimed was the owner of these rights to the photo play, "The Unchastened Woman."

Smith claims that there is no such corporation as the Rialto de Luxe Productions and that therefore it did not own the rights which Chadwick, as the vice president of the corporation, undertook to transfer.

The plaintiff asks for $10,000 damages in return for the money advanced at the time the contract was entered into.

Fairbanks Aroused

Wants to Know Why Ci-ne-Ma Ad., Inc., Uses His Name with National Advertisers

Dennis F. O'Brien, Douglas Fairbank's attorney, has forwarded this office a carbon of a letter he has sent to D. E. Calnay, secretary of the Ci-ne-ma Ad., Inc., a Los Angeles company. Calnay has been offering national advertisers the privilege of exploiting their product in films made by Fairbanks.

WID'S DAILY published exclusively Calnay's letter in full in its issue of Monday, Jan. 26.

Here is Mr. O'Brien's letter:

Hollywood, Cal., Feb. 2, 1920.

D. E. Calnay, Ci-Ne-Ma-Ad-Inc.,

Dear Sir:

The attention of Mr. Douglas Fairbanks has been called to a certain announcement which you have caused to be circulated throughout the country as follows:—

"We can offer you twenty million circulation (more than all magazines combined), at the 'Saturday Evening Post' rates, as we have contracted with a few of the greatest producers and stars (like Griffith, Fairbanks and others of like magnitude) to insert your ad in their coming productions."

Mr. Fairbanks desires an explanation from you as to why you have used his name in connection with your announcement without any authorization from him. He has had no negotiations of any kind or character with you and the above is plainly a misrepresentation on your part to those with whom you seek to do business. Mr. Fairbanks demands a prompt retraction from you relative to your unauthorized use of his name to promote your business.

Plan Production in Hawaii

Los Angeles—It is expected that announcement will be made shortly of a new producing unit which will center its activities in Hawaii.

Richards Leaves for Home

E. V. Richards, of Saenger Amusement left for New Orleans yesterday.

He elected while here nearly all the officers of the "Anti Horse-Thief Asso.," which is being organized.

Black Company a $10,000,000 Unit

The Black New England Theaters, Inc., which, as noted exclusively in WID'S DAILY, had been formed, is a $10,000,000 corporation, and not a $1,000,000 company as published. The error was made in telegraphic transmission.

Alfred S. Black, of Rockland, Me., is president of the corporation, John A. Black, of New York, is vice president and H. A. Mintz, a well known Boston attorney, is secretary. The corporation will act as a holding company for all the Black interests and affiliated units, and as a result of the re-financing, Black expects to extend his interests even more rapidly than in the past.

Wants 20,000 Reels

Navy Establishing Its Own Exchange—First National Output Secured

The U. S. Navy has plans under way for the establishing of a film library to contain 20,000 reels.

A building, formerly used as a rifle range in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, is now being renovated to accommodate projection rooms and storage space, as well as modern equipment for the inspection of films.

The exchange is under direct supervision of the Bureau of Navigation, Sixth Division, Navy Department, Commander C. B. Mayo in charge. Lieutenant Joseph O'Reilly is in charge locally.

A deal has been already closed with First National for 308 reels of films, the financial consideration being approximately $20,000. Other deals are pending with the other large producers and negotiations are conducted on either an outright purchase basis or a long term contract basis.

The idea was first thought of by the Navy officials after the signing of the armistice when the various welfare organizations turned over surplus funds to the Navy Department.

It is planned to make the building in the Brooklyn Yard the headquarters for the entire plan, but it is also contemplated erecting an outlet at Mare Island, San Francisco, and the naval base at Hampton Roads (Norfolk).

While the library will be expanded until the 20,000 reels are secured, the funds on hand will not permit of the purchase of entirely new subjects. Material that has been in circulation will also be bought when found suitable for the Navy's needs.

After Rights to "Irene."

Carle E. Carlton admitted yesterday that a number of offers had been made for the screen rights to "Irene," in which Edith Day is now appearing. The last figure was $60,000, he said.

Carlton stated that he was undecided as to what he would do with the play. There is a possibility that he will produce it himself with Edith Day in the starring role. He sails for London on Saturday.

"The Deadlier Sex," Blanche Sweet-Jesse Hampton production will be released by Pathe, March 28th.

Omaha, Neb. — Churches and schools, many of them paying more than theaters in the towns where they are located, are among the choice patrons of the Fox exchange, says Manager Sidney Meyer.

"We deal with them as regularly as with the exhibitor, and most of them pay more than would a theater in a town of the same size," said Manager Meyer.

"We are making every effort to encourage this kind of business. It does not hurt the local exhibitor—it merely makes a greater following for the motion picture in his town, that is all."

In the Courts

An attachment for $25,000 against the property of the World Film Corp. has been issued in the Supreme Court by Justice Platzek in the suit of the Frohman Amusement Corp. to recover this sum as profit alleged to be due from the leasing of the films of four plays owned by the plaintiff. The attachment was obtained because the World Film is a Virginia corporation.

The Export and Import Film Co. has brought an injunction suit in the Supreme Court against Sarah Backer, Emanuel Arnstein, Samuel Levy and the First National Exchange, Inc. The papers on file merely show that the purpose of the suit is to "restrain the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's rights of possession of the suite at 1109 to 1111 in the Godfrey Building, and the vault on the eleventh floor, and restraining the defendants from interfering in any way with the plaintiff's business."

Supreme Court Justice Finch has decided that the Octagon Films must testify before trial in the suit brought by Harry Houdini but decides that the examination of the defendant's books is to be limited to such as are needed to refresh the memory of the witness. The court decided also that the defendant need not testify concerning its defense that the limit of the cost of advertising and manufacturing the films was increased by mutual agreement from $135,000 to $202,000.

S.-L. Buys Material

S-L. Pictures, Inc., has bought for production and later release through Metro, motion picture rights to "The Trap," the novel of modern life by Maximilian Foster, now running serially in McClure's Magazine, and "The Fallen Idol,," by Guy Bolton.

Pathe Wins Over Lumiere

Judge Learned Hand in the U. S. District Court, has dismissed the suit of Samuel J. Lumiere, photographer, who claimed Pathe had infringed on a copyright which he alleged he had taken out on certain photographs of Dolores Cassinelli. The photographs were used by Pathe in an advertisement insert in some trade papers. It developed that the copyright was not actually registered until long after the inserts were used.

The main defence of Pathe was that Miss Cassinelli had purchased the picture outright without giving Lumiere the privilege of copyrighting them, and that a photographer has no right to a copyright unless the purchaser of a picture gives such right by a formal assignment.

Lumiere stated yesterday that suit had been dismissed on a technical ground and that the action had not ended at that point.

Reorganized

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Dallas, Tex.—Specially Film Corp. of Dallas, reorganized with a capital of $50,000 to sell states rights productions to Southwestern exhibitors on a franchise basis. W. G. Underwood, president, and the directors include three prominent Southwestern exhibitors and a Dallas banker.

This move is in line with strenuous efforts being made by big interests to control exchanges and theaters. Coincident with this reorganization comes word that L. C. Baxley attractions, another Dallas concern, is reorganizing with a capital of $7,500 to purchase independent productions.

More Territory Sold

Murray W. Garsson has sold "The Blindness of Youth" for Indiana to the Associated Feature Film Co., of Indianapolis, and for Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas to the Specialty Film Co., of Dallas.

Cuts and Flashes

"Charlie's Ward," from the pen of A. Guisti, has been purchased by Myron Selznick, who has also bought "Hearts Aflame," by Robert Alexander Wason, through the Paget Agency.

Pathe will release Frank Keenan's newest production, "Smouldering Embers," on February 29th.

June Caprice, in "In Walked Mary," an Albert Capellani production, from Oliver D. Bailey's legitimate success, "Liza Ann," will be released by Pathe on March 7th.

Burton George, who is directing the Selznick production, "Prince of Pines," has gone to New Hampshire to make several scenes.

John Lynch's story, "A Man of Iron," is to be produced by Selznick shortly. Edward J. Montagne is writing the continuity.

Howard Selznick is en route for the coast, where he will act as representative for Myron Selznick, in charge of production work on Selznick pictures.

The Eff & Eff Producing Co. gave a luncheon on Tuesday at the Claridge to state rights buyers, after which the "Surprise of the Season" was shown to them and reviewers at Wurlitzer Hall. The surprise picture proved to be "Bullin' the Bolsheviki."

Colored Folks May Sue

Reading, Pa.—A report concerning the Colonial was read at a meeting of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, stating that they were not being admitted to the first floor of the house. It was decided to hand the testimony secured to the National Legal Advice Committee in New York, to ascertain whether the local colored people have a case.

Will Rogers and company have returned from Santa Cruz where they have been working under the direction of Clarence Badger for the film version of F. G. Holland's "Seven Oaks," to be released as "Jes Call Me Jim."

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

To help exploit "The Cinema Murder," 1,000,000 copies of a four page folder are being circularized throughout the United States and Canada. In addition, Famous is sending a duplicate copy to every exhibitor in this country and the Dominion. The folder, nine inches by seven in size, has the front cover devoted to a drawing of a woman with a mirror in her hands. The two inside pages have a reproduction of Baron de Meyer's painting of Marion Davies, published in the January edition of Heart's magazine. Incidentally, that gave Marion Davies, a great deal of publicity, for that publication has a large circulation.

The fact that simultaneously with the release of Mildred Harris Chaplin in "Polly of the Storm Country," Little, Brown & Co., of Boston will issue the novel in book form, should provide live exhibitors with some exploitation ideas. Grace Miller White is the author.

Omaha, Neb.—Manager R. S. Ballantine of the Moon gives to each patron a ticket requesting that person's choice for an overture by the Moon choir. The selections are listed and that receiving the most votes for any future show is played by the orchestra, and complimentary tickets are sent in a personal letter to each of those who named the piece. Manager Ballantine has made a specialty of the overtures in his theater, conceiving special stage sets and arrangements that have attracted much attention. "Getting the house in the proper mood for a picture means much," he says.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Chorus girls, the wicked maids of the ensemble, are regarded with curiosity by the average theater goer and hinging his exploitation campaign for Constance Talmadge's First National production "Two Weeks" about that fact, S. Barret McCormick packed the Circle. A four column by 16 inch ad showing a girl in negligee was run in the dailies,, with the inscription under it, "Saucy Lillums. She's a chorus girl, carries her bathing suit in a vanity case, and is one of the principal reasons why they repealed the daylight saving law—naughty just so far—then slip and on go the Weed chains." The matter was all written in that style. Lobby displays in which Constance Talmadge was scantily draped, etc., were more than noticed. Profits resulted.

Gould Here

Stuart Gould, publicity representative attached to the Omaha exchange of Famous Players, is in town for a few days.

Among Exchangemen

Harry Weinberg, salesman for various exchanges out of Omaha, has been added to the force at the Fox exchange as assistant manager to Manager Sidney Meyer.

Omaha, Neb.—Lloyd Cunningham, advertising director for the largest out-door resort, has been added to the force of the First National Exchange as director of advertising and exploitation.

Cleveland, Ohio—It is reported that W. W. Kulp, former manager of the local Robertson-Cole branch, has been appointed manager of the United branch here, following the taking over of the exchange from Hallmark.

Detroit, Mich.—George De Butts has been replaced by Jerome Safron as manager of Robertson-Cole.

St. Louis, Mo.—Lew Brent, formerly with American, is now on the road for Pathe, having been replaced by American with Charles Gregg.

Baltimore, Md.—Michael Seigel, formerly a salesman for Universal, will manage the Screen Art Pictures Exchange here, of which Michael Lessy, of Philadelphia, is the owner.

Mark Goldman Here

Mark Goldman, Cincinnati Realart manager, is in town for a week, interviewing Messrs. Woody and Ragland and renewing old acquaintances.

Toledo Exhibitors Combine

Toledo, Ohio—Booking combination on part of leading local exhibitors is alleged. This city is booked from Cleveland or Detroit and the reported move by exhibitors is causing concern in branch offices in those cities. All the early run accounts in Toledo are said to be in it, excepting Horowitz Brothers, who have only one house. A Toledo exhibitor who seemed to know about the combine said it was due because of proposed city circuit of Horwitz Brothers houses. As the latter at the present moment are on paper only, this reason is not satisfying Cleveland-Detroit branch managers.

Goldwyn Say He Is Not Bucking the Exhibitors—Speaks of Financial Interests

Samuel Goldwyn, through the home office yesterday issued a lengthy statement to the exhibitors of America in which he spoke,, although indirectly, of the theater activities of his organization.

The following extract from the statement is perhaps of special significance:

"The Goldwyn Company stands for the integrity of the producer as well as the integrity of the exhibitor. Goldwyn is a producing organization. As such it is willing to hep and improve the theater of the progressive exhibitor. We want to help him get more business through better entertainment. And at the same time we are going to be sure that there is a home for Goldwyn pictures where such homes do not exist today. We are and shall be no exhibitor's competitor."

Goldwyn then spoke of the increased production activity of his company and its assured sources of material through its affiliation with the Al Woods, the Selwyns and others. It is interesting to note that the statement includes the name of Sam Harris, of Cohan & Harris,

The statement at the close refers to the entrance of the Du Pont interests in Goldwyn when it says:

"This statement is not an opinion, but a fact, as witness that the most important development in the motion picture business to-day is that the conesrvative investors of the nation have applied their resources to the industry. This will result not only in a bettering of the industry, in so far as it affects every exhibitor, but will allow that latitude which is necessary for the creation of a great art product."

For Self-Preservation

So Loew Defends His Entrance in to the Producing Field

Los Angeles—Marcus Loew characterizes his affiliation with Metro one of "self preservation."

"I went into motion pictures for self-protection," he said, "Metro needed a theater affiliation and Loew's, Inc., needed Metro, so that the union of our interests is mutually beneficial.

"Loew, Inc., was practically the last to invade both fields of the motion picture industry—exhibiting and producing. The past year I have seen new affiliations on every side. Exhibitors became film producers. Film producers acquired theater interests. Studios and theaters coordinated.

"The producer was compelled to own a house in certain large cities to have his first run picture properly presented. The owner of theaters showing vaudeville or dramatic attractions had to buy picture houses and producing organizations to hold his own in his game. My move was simply one of self-preservation."

Premiere of "River's End"

Marshal Neilan's first independent production to be released through First National, "The River's End," will be shown for the first time at the Hotel Biltmore Monday, on which occasion a dinner will precede the presentation of the film. The showing is for members of the Canadian Club.

Tom Terriss Productions

Tom Terriss is commencing work upon a big special production for Vitagraph. The choice lies between the two stories, "The Great Divide" and "The Great Ruby." This will be the most ambitious production that Terriss has worked upon and will be the first production since he completed Winchell Smith's celebrated play, "The Fortune Hunter."

Cameraman and cutter, with his own camera outfit, is open for an offer. Has had wide experience with industrial pictures. Box D15.

Nude Knees Cause Shock

Port Chester, N. Y.—Just as soon as nude knees were flashed on the screen in St. Peter's Episcopal Church here, Rev. Harry B. Heald called for the lights.

The minister absolutely failed to take cognizance of the fact that those in the film were wearing Scottish costumes and had to expose their knees.

He declared that the church would not show any more films unless censored first by him. Meanwhile Jack Rogowsky, manager of the Strand passes the buck by saying that the film was passed by the National Board of Review and that ought to be enough for anyone.

Seattle, Wash.—Mrs. Danz, wife of Joseph Danz, who operates four theaters on lower First Ave., was held up Tuesday night with her brother, B. C. Cohen, and her sister, Ruth Cohen, and diamonds valued at $18,300 were taken from the two women.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, of the Rivoli and Rialto, made arrangements with J. R. Silliman, of the Soldiers and Sailors' Home at Bath, New York, to have the G. A. R. veterans march into the Rivoli to see Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead." The arrangement is a wise one for exhibitors playing that picture in houses in localities where there are such homes. Invite the vets and play the fact up. It will prove worth while!

Minneapolis, Minn.—When the Strand booked 'Fair and Warmer," Manager Charles C. Perry had to contend with such a handicap as zero weather. But that did not prevent him from packing the house, and this is how he did it. Taking advantage of prohibition, he advertised it as a "Cocktail" picture, constructing a giant bottle, two thermometers, as large as an ordinary door, and a cocktail glass, and paraded them through the streets. The coincident appearance of prohibition stories in newspapers proved an aid to him. All of the advertising matter hinged about the "Cocktail" slogan and the demise of John Barleycorn, the picture being exploited as the thing which still had a punch.

Lo! The Poor Author!

John W. Grey Answers P. A. Powers on the Future of the Business

"Why is it, that when the cry of 'Wolf, Wolf!' is wafted on the wings of the morning some bright financier takes up the cudgels, not in defence of, but to beat down his very source of bread and butter?

"Why is it that the very first cry to be heard when retrenchment is in order is "The author is getting too much,' or 'The star is overpaid?' Why isn't some mention made of the fabulous salaries or drawing accounts of the men who do not create, do not portray, who do not make possible by any other means than their bankrolls or their business training, but who quietly sit by and draw down vast sums for, as they put it 'executive management?'

"In nearly every producing company, if the truth were known and the balance sheets were investigated, one would find pretty little items of expenses under the title of executives' salaries.

In Other Words, What Is a Picture?

"Is it executive management or is it an author's story?

"In the picture business nearly every one has been running wild on the bases excepting the author. First the stars took a shot at old man Bankroll.....and up to a certain point they deserved it. Now the directors are skyrocketing....and to a certain point they also deserve it..... but who ever heard of an author really coming into his own?

"Let's look the thing in the face. Let us analyze the big pictures of the year and find out who made the money out of them? Did Frank L. Packard get anything like what was due him for 'The Miracle Man,' or did the distributor, the producer, the director and every other person connected with the thing reap untold benefits from his brain child?

"As producers let us start at the other end of the string, say I, and pay the man who, in the last analysis makes it possible to live.

"Let us start retrenchment with executives.....let's make less profit .....let's curtail in other directions, but PAY THE AUTHOR."

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Sacrifice of patriot in posing as traitor to his country at behest of President Lincoln.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... 6,351 feet

Ring up your F. P. exchange. Don't let 'em give you a busy wire and get "The Copperhead" written across your books for double or triple your usual time. For here's a picture that's going to dig way deep under their skins.

"The Copperhad" was a great play, some asserted it was the great American play. Its story is told on the screen simply and directly and touches the heights of drama again and again as tragedy after tragedy descends on the being of poor Milt Shanks who played traitor to his country at the behest of his President, Abraham Lincoln.

He wanted to fight for the Union in its hour of need even as he had wanted to fight in the Mexican war before. But the very moment that he would enlist he was summoned to Washington by his old townsman. He returned to Millville, sullen and changed. He refused to join the northern forces recruiting in the town. He watched his son go off behind the flag in silence. Later he was captured while attempting to smuggle horses over into the confederate lines but released from life imprisonment because of the heroism of his son.

But his son was mortally wounded and died cursing him, his wife passed on breathing that he was "unclean" and so Milt lived on a broken man until the beginning of the twentieth century when the happiness of his young granddaughter was menaced because of his silence. And then that the father of the man she loved, a veteran of the war, might give his consent he told of Lincoln's request that he play the part of a spy in the war, to live for his country instead of to die for it, a task a thousand times as hard.

You know all the way through the picture of the situation confronting Milt Shanks. It is harder to face than cannon. And Milt Shanks as interpreted by Lionel Barrymore will live as one of the screen's greatest characters. Mr. Barrymore expresses wonders with his eyes and the slightest movement of his facial muscles. He registers the quiet and at first calm but then racking suffering of the Illinois farmer with successive touches of mastery. //

He is supported well by such players as Doris Rankin, William Carlton, Frank Joyner, Arthur Rankin, Richard Carlyl, Anne Cornwall and N. Schroell.

Speaking of Americanization: Here's the Goods and Then Some

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Copperhead" proves that the best propaganda is entertainment. Bury your idea of Americanism deep in an entertainment and it will be more potent than it would be on the surface. "The Copperhead" is by no means propaganda but everyone who sees it is going to be a better American for it. And they're going to revel in it!

There are many unusual channels of exploitation open to the exhibitors who play "The Copperhead" and the picture offers material to cover all those channels. Its source, its star, its topic, its drama, these are elements regarding which much may be said. Again its notable cast and the care evinced in caring for historic details. A chance to spread on publicity and advertising is offered and praise be "The Copperhead" is there with the real dramatic goods to back up all the superlatives you use in describing it. Go to it and make money.

Without Being a World Beater This Is the Best Made Picture from Selznick to Date

Olive Thomas in
"FOOTLIGHTS AND SHADOWS"
Selznick—Select

DIRECTOR .....John W. Noble

SCENARIO BY.....R. Cecil Smith
CAMERAMAN .....Jack Brown
AS A WHOLE.....Generally interesting romance of Broadway dancer; shows as the best produced picture Selznick has turned out.
STORY.....Not strong by any means but maintains steady interest throughout.
DIRECTION .....Average
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Average
LIGHTINGS.....Meet requirements without showing anything extraordinary.
CAMERA WORK..... Good
STAR.....Gives satisfactory performance while her prettiness will certainly attract.
SUPPORT .....Average
EXTERIORS.....Plain city shots
INTERIORS.....Good including big roof garden scene.
DETAIL.....All right except for useless silhouette of star undressing.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Plain romance in a Broadway setting.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"Footlights and Shadows" is the best done Selznick picture that has been releasd and while it contains no strong dramatic moments in the romance of Broadway that it presents, it is generally interesting throughout, well put together and attractive by reason of the star who shows to her best advantage.

Gloria Dawn is a dancer on a roof garden. One night a strange man unlocks the door of her apartment and enters, collapsing immediately thereafter. From his vague mumblings Gloria learns that he is an explorer. She keeps him in her home and nurses him back to health. A deep romance springs up between them and this causes Gloria to break her engagement with Peter Shaw, the owner of the roof show whom she had eccepted merely because a marriage with him meant wealth.

After breaking her engagement she returns to find the explorer gone. Back at his club it is shown that O'Farrel, the explorer, suffers temporary lapses of memory owing to the contracting of jungle fever on his last expedition. He now remembers his past but knows not where to seek Gloria, the girl of his heart. He takes to liquor and one night lands at the roof garden where he insults Gloria.

Later a fire breaks out and Gloria rescues O'Farrel from the panic-stricken mob. Subsequently he goes to her home (which, by the way, was once tenanted by him), encounters Shaw pulling the usual villainous stunt, throws him out and tenders himself to Gloria in apology.

Not substantial stuff by any means but it is treated in good taste with but few exceptions, the scenario runs smoothly and the action is illuminated occasionally by interesting scenes on the roof garden showing Gloria rendering her dance specialties. The fire scenes are handled pretty well although the devices employed in bids for thrills are rather obvious.

Olive Thomas registers satisfactorily in the stellar role and her beauty is sure to atract. Ivo Watson as Shaw is acceptable while the supporting cast, never prominent save in the case of the hero, is competent.

Get Your People in: They'll Hardly Be Disappointed

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

It's merely a case of how much you care to promote just a satisfactory production along exploitation lines that confronts you in "Footlights and Shadows." The picture is worth advertising, for it's worth showing, and as a consequence the only problem is how far you want to go and along what lines.

The picture offers good advertising possibilities. Mention of the star and the fact that she appears in the role of a dancer on Broadway are advertising assets, particularly the latter, inasmuch as your people will realize that Miss Thomas is appearing in her element.

Catch lines and readers written around the trick by which heroine and hero becomes acquainted will prove attractive. Something on this order is suggested: "How had he come into possession of a key to her apartment? Why had he come tumbling in while all the city slept? Was this the beginning of the romance that her old Mammy had predicted? See 'Footlight and Shadows.'"

Keenan in a Part Which Is a Departure from His Usual Portrayal

Frank Keenan in
"SMOLDERING EMBERS"
Frank Keenan Prod.—Pathe

DIRECTOR .....Frank Keenan
AUTHOR .....Kate Corbaley
SCENARIO BY.....Dorothy Yost
CAMERAMAN .....Robert Newhart
AS A WHOLE.....Gives the star the center of the stage throughout the production; not unusually strong but will hold interest.
STORY.....Shows the love and devotion that remains in the heart of a man broken in spirit
DIRECTION.....Put in some unnecessary bits for the purpose of getting in human touches.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Good
LIGHTINGS .....Average
CAMERA WORK..... Usual stuff
STAR.....Plays the part of a tramp with sincerity and realism.
SUPPORT.....Jay Belasco a trifle unconvincing as the son; two tramps especially interesting but their parts are short-lived.
EXTERIORS .....Pleasing
INTERIORS .....The real thing
DETAIL .....Nothing seriously wrong
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Tramp returns to his home town in time to save his son from an unscrupulous step-father.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

Frank Keenan's latest production, "Smoldering Embers," gives him a role a little different than those which he has played in recent pictures. In this Keenan, a tramp returns, presumably from the dead, to his home town in time to save his son from "going wrong."

The production averages well throughout. The direction is good and there are some good bits in it which, while they don't pertain directly to the action, provide a few human touches which go toward emphasizing the embers of love and devotion which still smolder in the heart of one who is broken in spirit. The comedy moments are few. It seems that more humor could have been gotten out of the star's association with his two hobo companions. They were especially fine types.

"Smoldering Embers" is not without its improbabilities, however. It is possible, of course, but then again it isn't likely that the mayor's son would be running around with the cobbler's daughter. Notwithstanding a certain obviousness and some minor absurdities, there is a well sustained interest and a slight but pleasing romance which will appeal particularly to Keenan fans.

The opening scenes show Keenan and his two hobo friends assisting the mayor of the town with his broken down auto and at the same time relieving him of his wallet. They divide the money contents but a letter is of special interest to Frank since it establishes the fact that the owner is the husband of his former wife who had married again, believing Keenan had died in Alaska.

Keenan goes to the home of his former wife demanding to know something of his son. Co-incidence provides a chance meeting in the cobbler's shop where the hobo goes for a pair of shoes and the son is calling on the cobbler's daughter. A friendship springs up between the two and later that evening Keenan accompanies his son, who does not know the man is his father, to a roadhouse owned by the mayor, his step-father.

In order to secure the support of a certain Congressman, the mayor has been trying to unsuccessfully force a marriage between his son and the Congressman's daughter so he frames a card game in which the son loses some of the city's money. Keenan sees through the game and later wins back his son's losses which he returns to him at the critical moment and then goes back to the "trail" leaving the son to marry the girl of his choice and without making known his identity.

Very Good Program Attraction a Little Above the Average

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is as good, if not quite a little better, than the recent Keenan productions. There is something rather novel in the idea of the tramp who returns to help his son and doesn't make known who he is, and the ending is perhaps a bit different from that which you would expect. Because after accomplishing the salvation of his son, the father resumes his hobo life.

If you have played previous Keenan pictures with success you may be sure "Smoldering Embers" will meet with genuine approval. There is a degree of pathos with enough humor and a pleasing romance between the son and the cobbler's daughter together with a splendid performance by the star who is capably supported by a well selected cast.

Interesting Hobo Story Offers Star Role a Little Out of the Ordinary

Harry Carey in
"OVERLAND RED"
Universal

DIRECTOR ..... Lynn F. Reynolds
AUTHOR ..... Harry H. Knibbs
SCENARIO BY .....Lynn F. Reynolds
CAMERAMAN ..... Hugh McClung
AS A WHOLE.....Interesting and novel in its treatment; registers some good bits in life of a tramp.
STORY.....Intimate glimpse into the habits and mannerisms of a sort of "professional" hobo.
DIRECTION.....Got the most out of the story and keeps up the interest very well.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Not out of the ordinary
CAMERA WORK .....Usual pretty shots
STAR.....Gets away from straight cowboy stuff; is mighty pleasing as a "Knight of the Road."
SUPPORT.....Vola Vale the only girl in the cast; Harold Goodwin winsome juvenile.
EXTERIORS....Beautiful shots of western country
INTERIORS ..... Seldom required
DETAIL.....Well written titles get many of the laughs.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Tramp and boy companion accidentally get possession of gold mine.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

Harry Carey has stepped out of his role, as it were, in "Overland Red" and plays the part of a hobo instead of a cowboy although he manages to get in some really fine and spectacular riding. There is one especially thrilling chase down the mountain side that will get a few gasps for it surely is real and decidedly well photographed.

The story by Harry Herbert Knibbs is well known and appeared serially in the Good Housekeeping Magazine. There is not a wealth of plot substance in it, but the comedy moments satisfy and Carey's portrayal of the hobo and the title will get laughs.

However, there is enough interest in Harry's effort to evade his pursuers; his encounter and following adventures with a young fellow from the east who is out west for his health; the simple little romance between Harry's young protege and Vola Vale, daughter of the wealthy ranch owner.

Harry and his youthful companion, Harold Goodwin, are traveling via the railroad ties on the desert when they suddenly come upon a man who has died from exhaustion. In his pocket they find a claim to the mine which they hide when the sheriff and some of his pals come upon them. The sheriff, played by Charles LeMoyne, knows that the dead man owned a mine and suspicious of the fact that Harry has information regarding the mine he takes the two as prisoners but they make their escape.

While enjoying some food which Vola Vale gives them when she suddenly comes upon them, the sheriff again makes his appearance and takes Harry prisoner, leaving "the kid" behind. Vola persuades Harold to return with her to the ranch where her father gives him a job.

Harry escapes and goes to Los Angeles and stakes a claim to the mine and returns to the ranch in an auto all decked out in a new outfit and makes quite a grand entree. All this time a romance has been springing up between Harold and Vola but when Harold is shot by the sheriff who is trailing him in the hope of finding the location of the mine, the happy ending is delayed. Another discovery is made by Harry when he ascertains from a letter written on the opposite side of the claim, that the dead man was Vola's uncle and that she is the owner of the mine. Of course, she insists that Harold and Harry become her partners.

Should Please Generally and Appeal Especially to Carey Fans

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This is even a bit better than the average program feature and also a bit ahead of some of Carey's recent productions. Admirers of the star are going to like him as "Overland Red," the tramp. It is quite a little different from anything he has done recently and he plays the part with apparent genuine enjoyment and registers the habits and mannerisms of the hobo with sincerity. Harold Goodwin, who will be remembered for his splendid work in support of Mary Pickford in "Heart o' The Hills" is the youthful hobo.

Some catchlines which might attract attention are: "You know how well Harry Carey can play the part of a cowboy but you will be equally pleased with his interpretation of 'Overland Red,' the hobo, in his latest Universal production." Or, "Have you ever 'counted ties?' Come to the blank theater and help Harry Carey 'count ties' in his new production, 'Overland Red'."

Unusual and Striking Story of the Sea

Madlaine Traverse in
"THE HELL SHIP"
Fox

DIRECTOR ..... Scott Dunlap
AUTHOR ..... Denison Clift
SCENARIO BY .....Denison Clift
CAMERAMAN ..... George Schneiderman
AS A WHOLE.....Unusual picture of the sea that should prove interesting despite weak points in working out the story.
STORY.....A number of forced twists but action is so unusual these may be overlooked.
DIRECTION.....Is responsible for a fine atmosphere of the old salty sea and has selected very good types.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fair
LIGHTINGS ....Nothing unusual
CAMERA WORK .....Good sea shots
STAR .....Registers well in a role unusual for her.
SUPPORT.....Very good with specially fine types for seamen.
EXTERIORS.....Practically all shot on decks of schooner.
INTERIORS ..... Few but appropriate
DETAIL.....Shows much shooting and gun-play
CHARACTER OF STORY....Romance of girl who has lived all her life on the sea and man she rescues from the waves.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

Despite many slips in story construction, some of them of an undeniably "convenient" nature, "The Hell Ship" is an unusual and forceful subject because of the striking difference of its plot from the general run of feature stuff. Practically all of the action is staged on a schooner and even though this be the case, the tempo is never allowed to drop. It is always kept at a good pace, generally by clever means, though sometimes the author slips in some twist that is pretty hard to credit.

Madlaine Traverse appears as Paula, daughter of an old sea dog. She has spent nearly all her life on the sea with him. Finally he is killed in an attempted mutiny and Paula takes command of the vessel despite the discontent of the crew and the menacing attitude of the brutish first mate.

Later the ship picks up John Hadlock, survivor of a wreck, and a romance springs up between him and Paula. In response to her father's dying wish Paula puts into San Francisco and sends John for her younger sister, Glory. She is charged with Glory's future happiness but it is hard to reconcile Paula's idea in bringing a young and unsophisticated girl aboard the Hell Ship to find happiness.

Glory never gets to love her sister but finds herself often in John's company, and Paula watches her only romance slipping away. The crew drunk, a fire gets beyond control and after it is over Paula, John and Glory find themselves on a raft. After two days drifting Paula catches sight on a rescue boat while the other two are stretched out unconscious. She sees them safely in the boat and then commands the sailors to row away at the point of her gun. John comes to before the big vessel is reached and goes back for Paula to whom he confesses his love then and there.

The action includes a lot of gun play, Paula herself drawing the trigger with deadly effect more times than once. Madlaine Traverse is a good type for the mannish role of the woman of the sea and plays it capably. Albert Roscoe is John and Betty Bouton takes the role of Glory. A number of specially good types appear in support including the supporting principals, Dick La Reno, Jack Curtis, Fred Bond and William Ryno.

Play It for What It Is; a Strange Story of the Sea

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Although "The Hell Ship" may have faults in story construction, in fact more faults that one will find in the average feature production on the market, there is no getting away from the fact that it will probably prove of great interest to the majority of audiences owing to its unusual character and the fine sea atmosphere which the director has injected largely through the selection of fine types.

To those of sensitive minds it may contain a too liberal use of the pistol, but after all, the natural exigencies of the story demand its use and it fits in with the generally fascinating barbaric air of the whole picture.

Advertise "The Hell Ship" by a liberal use of the title together with some inkling of the story presented vividly. Such catch lines as "She had lived her whole life on the sea and hardly knew what love was. Then one day she realized—" and "She found true romance on a schooner that had the reputation of being "The Hell Ship" are suggested.

Murder Mystery Story Doesn't Register

Dorothy Dalton in
"HIS WIFE'S FRIEND"
Ince—Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... Joseph De Grasse
AUTHOR .....From J. B. Harris Burland's "The White Rock."
SCENARIO BY .....R. Cecil Smith
CAMERAMAN ..... John Stumar
AS A WHOLE.....Majority of this is very good mystery story but climax doesn't register as dramatic—in fact, strikes false comedy note.
STORY.....Exceedingly well evolved murder mystery story plot with solution no one could every guess.
DIRECTION.....Has gotten over everything except the solution scenes very well indeed.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Fine
CAMERA WORK ..... Capable
STAR.....Registers with fine effect in role calling for considerable emotional display.
SUPPORT ..... Very good
EXTERIORS .....English country estate stuff; very good.
INTERIORS.....Some very rich; all appropriate
DETAIL.....English atmosphere well maintained; detective comedy hardly registers; one obvious difference in insert of letter and closeup of it.
CHARACTER OF STORY....Search and final discovery of cause of Englishman's violent death
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,612 feet

"His Wife's Friend" is a corking good murder mystery story in all but one of its most vital points—the solution. After building up suspense accumulatively for the best part of five full reels, the surprise comes and it surely is a surprise. For instead of a well-worked out solution of the whole mystery a sequence is introduced that is merely and disappointingly amusing because of the unworkmanlike manner in which it has been handled.

And the subtitles! If some of them don't get guffaws with their "Yes, he told me to kill myself but I'd forgotten," "kill yourself," "Stop!" "I must kill Lady Grimwood, it is the order of the all highest," or words to that effect, then the wind is all wrong. That the characters who speak in the above manner are either under the influence of dope or addressing somebody that is, makes little difference. Most people are going to smile or laugh outright at the scenes and the lines

Aside from this sequence, which, of course, is very important in considering the whole, the pciture is fashioned and directed with rare judgment and skill. The death by violence of Sir Robert Grimwood casts suspicion on Major Heritage the admirer of Lady Marion Grimwood who had lived a lonely and unhappy existence with her husband. A Chinaman and Lord Waverly of the neighboring estate who also admires Marion are others who might have committed the crime.

From this point on the picture progresses with ever-gathering suspense until the denouement which reveals the fact that the Chinaman, seeking revenge for Sir Robert's murder of his son in China years before, employed a powerful drug which he administered to the Englishman who then straightway obeyed the Chinaman's command and killed himself. There is a lot more of this dope stuff concerning Lord Waverly which brings the laughs and bears little relation to the main action of the plot. It might be cut out to good advantage.

Dorothy Dalton plays well as Marion while Henry Mortimer is seen in the opposite role of Heritage, acquitting himself very creditably. Others are Richard Neil and Warren Cook.

In Its Present State It Will Hardly Get Over

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If this picture were edited in its final sequence and many of the laughable titles and scenes removed it would get over very nicely as a murder mystery story. In its present state, however, there are scenes and subtitles that certainly don't belong in a dramatic solution of a picture of this type. They cause the end of the picture to break quite completely down and go a long way toward spoiling the good effect the previous scenes created.

The picture doesn't contain any great advertising possibilities and although the title is one that will attract certain crowds it bears little relation to the story. However, there are many ways to present a good mystery picture both as regards stunt stuff and straight advertising and, provided "His Wife's Friend" were altered in the above-mentioned respects, it would deserve the best of these means of exploitation.

"He nearly bumped me off my private cloud!"

I forgot I was safe in the projection room and grabbed my hat—I was afraid the wind from the propeller would blow it clear back in the alley. He came so close—and me a mile high in the air all the time—I honestly thought I could hear him grit his teeth when he jumped for the ladder. Did I do any business? Whoopee! "On With the Dance" is one of the most extravagant pictures ever produced, extravagant in actual details of production, extravagant in story, extravagant in characterization and extravagant from the technical angles. And it is a picture that's bound to make every audience that sees it sit right up and take notice. In other words it's a big moneymaker and the business it will do will only be confined to the limits of the theaters that show it.

Particular attention should be drawn to the wonderful setting and lightings. In these days of one super-production after another a set and a light effect has to be pretty unusual to attract attention. "On With the Dance" is amazing in these respects. And thus invested the dramatic action of the picture takes an additional effect.

The story relates of Sonia, a Russian girl, who came to New York seeking happiness and the dance. She is attracted to Peter Derwynt, a young architect who is in love with an English girl. Sonia and Peter are seen in a situation that compromises Peter in her eyes. She breaks her engagement with him and marries Jimmie Sutherland, a millionaire waster. Peter then marries Sonia but leads a miserable existence with her because of her heedlessness and extravagance.

To secure additional money Sonia, at Jimmie's suggestion, appears as a masked dancer at a cabaret. Peter finds this out, misinterprets the relationship of his wife and Jimmie and shoots and kills the latter. Refusing to put in a defense for himself he is only saved by Sonia's lie to the effect that she and Jimmie were lovers. A divorce follows and Peter eventually finds happiness with his first love while Sonia awakening to her past foolishness, becomes the happy wife of an old friend.

Mae Murray's interpretation of Sonia is filled with an alluring abandon that always intrigues the attention. She is seen in the intimacy of her boudoir besides, and there are several flashes where the spectator has no trouble in discovering the length or the texture of her stockings. David Powell is a striking contrast as the conservative Peter. Robert Schable is profane enough as Jimmie and Alma Tell brings beauty and refinement to the role of the English girl. John Miltern is also well cast.

You Fellows of the Broadway and Transient Houses, Hop Right to This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

One exhibition of this and for the rest of the week you'll have to put up the ropes and the S. R. O. sign, you fellows of the Broadway and transient type of houses. The picture is dazzling in its various extravagancies and the story, often approaching on the racey, but never offensive to the cosmopolite, certainly will hold them all interested from first to last.

"On With the Dance" is a type of picture and when it comes to the neighborhood and the family theater the exhibitor would do well to consider the various scenes mentioned above in which Mae Murray is the central figure before he books it. Otherwise it is great. Nothing can stop it.

In advertising it stress the New York angle. Stories of New York always interest and this one has all the atmosphere of Broadway in its mad old days.

Interiors that Act

A. Béla Viragh–Flower
Art Director
Park-Whiteside Productions

One of the innovations of Lester Park and Edward Whiteside is that which has been developed in the scenic effects under the skillful direction of A. Bela Viragh-Flower.

Too few of the film producers have realized the possibilities of interiors. Some of the better stage producers, such as Belasco, and Ordynski of the Metropolitan Opera House, have proven that a whole story can virtually be told before a word is spoken, if the backgrounds and hangings are of the right kind.

In the new School of Scenic art, we find such masters as Bakst, Anisfeld, Urban, Pogany and Wenger. Add to these the name of Flower, one of the greatest in film circles, because he has devoted his genius to the perfection of interiors related only to the screen.

"Interiors that Act" are a development of Park-Whiteside Productions. You will recognize Park-Whiteside Productions the moment the scenes appear on the screen by the fact that they are marvelous actors in themselves.

They tell the story before the human actors have moved a muscle or spoken a word.

Watch the other producers imitate Flower's Interiors that Act, but more particularly be the first in your city to take advantage of this brand new screen innovation.

Looks Like Another Case of Good Magazine Story—Poor Picture Story

Madge Kennedy in
"THE BLOOMING ANGEL"
Goldwyn

DIRECTOR .....Victor Schertzinger
AUTHOR .....Wallace Irwin
SCENARIO BY.....Not credited
CAMERAMAN .....George Webber
AS A WHOLE.....Starts off like a pretty good comedy but loses itself in an "It Pays to Advertise" idea that fails to register.
STORY.....No story of consequence, the "romance" is foolish and most of action is centered around publicity stunt.
DIRECTION.....Failed to inject a five reeler's quota of laughs.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS .....Good
CAMERA WORK.....Straight shots
STAR.....Has much business to do but it's not the kind of stuff that registers.
SUPPORT .....Fair
EXTERIORS.....College town stuff; good
INTERIORS .....Appropriate
DETAIL.....They seem to slip up on the locations of certain sequences of the action.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Frivolous girl nabs studious husband and puts over publicity stunt to advertise a face cream.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

Here's a case of what was probably a good magazine story being entirely unfit for screen use. Wallace Irwin probably got over many a comedy point on the printed page by his choice of dialogue, etc., but as far as comedy situations go he never invented anything original or startling when he wrote "The Blooming Angel." As a natural result in its picture form the story quite fails to get over as a comedy. There is nothing to it but some co-educational college comedy and a lot of action circulating around a publicity stunt of the "It Pays to Advertise" school.

Floss is a cut-up in college and Chester Framm, under the guidance of the professor's daughter, is rounding into a good public speaker. Chester wears clothes of the typical hick variety and in the early reels this character is burlesqued considerably but gets a few laughs.

Subsequently for some reason that seems to drop out of the sky Floss asks Chester to marry her. He accepts and then starts work in an insurance house. This about concludes Chester's activities for the picture. Floss, short of money, conceives the idea of putting on the market an Angel Bloom complexion cream. It isn't a hit because she can't advertise it.

Then an elephant's services are enlisted. He is painted pink and led through the streets attracting large crowds. He finally plays dead. Floss is arrested, charged with elephant-slaughter but is released by the judge when the beast appears at the window. Her cream thus advertised she interests the judge in the company and later does a big business.

This action fails to show the spark of comedy generally and its laughs are very few and far between. The director seems to have mixed up his locations a bit. They speak of a train from the college town to the home of Floss' aunt but after a while the action seems to be transpiring all in the same place.

Madge Kennedy toys around with a lot of business but very little of it registers while her support including Pat O'Malley, Margery Wilson, Arthur Housman, Robert Chandler, Vera Lewis and others, fail to get into the comedy spirit at all.

The Angel Fails to Bloom in Any Robust Fashion

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

The probability is that most audiences will be disappointed in this. As said the opening sequence of co-educational comedy stuff gives promise but the body of the picture fails to live up to even the mild expectations aroused by the start. The whole situation can be summed up in the statement that it was a good magazine story but a poor picture story, which is nothing at all new.

To Madge Kennedy's special admirers the picture may appear in a slightly better light as she shows quite a bit of "clever" stuff in the opening sequence and is constantly in the center of the action from beginning to end. However, her chances of getting by would have been a hundred per cent better had she been provided with a vehicle that developed some sort of comedy situations instead of developing into a clever but unfunny publicity stunt as it does.

If you run it, however, you should be able to tie in a stunt with the druggists or department stores handling face creams. This may help.

No Story, No Drama, No Direction

"SEEING IT THROUGH"
Brentwood—Robertson-Cole

DIRECTOR ..... Claude H. Mitchell
AUTHOR ..... Claude H. Mitchell
SCENARIO BY ..... Not credited
CAMERAMAN ..... Ira Morgan
AS A WHOLE.....Very weak production in story value; makes one ask "What's it all about anyway?"
STORY.....Action is neither clear nor well centralized; no dramatic moments revealed.
DIRECTION.....Has registered very few scenes with any degree of clarity or force.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Fair
LIGHTINGS ..... Good
CAMERA WORK ..... Average
LEADING PLAYERS.....Zasu Pitts has role of stellar calibre but brings no outstanding personality to it; Edwin Stevens, heavy.
SUPPORT ..... Fair
EXTERIORS ..... Pretty country estate stuff
INTERIORS ..... Average
DETAIL .....Many flaws in story and direction easily detected.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Peculiar attempt of crook to swindle helpless girl of property frustrated by rich hero.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ....About 5,000 feet

Ever since King Vidor's "The Turn in the Road," the policy of the Brentwood company seems to have been to give a director entirely free play in the writing of a story and the production of it. With the case of "Seeing It Through," they have miscued quite badly for the story contrived by Claude Mitchell is neither well centralized nor possessing dramatic scenes, while his direction has fallen foul of the many amateurish qualities of the plot.

The picture opens quite promisingly but after sequence upon sequence reveals no sort of story interest the mere succession of scenes becomes irritating and forces the spectator to ask "What's it all about, anyway?"

Neither does the cast make any firm impression, either individually or collectively. Zasu Pitts who is entrusted with the leading feminine role, that in importance approaches stellar quality, hasn't the personality or the ability under the present direction to register an appealing or distinctive character. Her rather helpless stare and the old style Griffith manner in which she uses her hands are aggravating attempts at expression that convey small meaning.

Miss Pitts plays the role of Betty Lawrence who lives alone with her invalid mother on property cutting into a large estate owned by Jim Carrington. In financial straights Betty leases the ground to Bogrum, a crook, sends her mother to a sanitarium and goes to work for Bogrum. Bogrum leases the property to a family that proceeds to make it worthless, and swindles Betty at every turn.

Eventually her mother dies. Betty goes to Carrington for assistance and Carrington discovers that Bogrum has gained control of the property and is ready to sell to him. Evidence from Bogrum's safe, procured by one whom he had long maltreated proves his undoing and so Betty and Carrington make their property and their hearts one.

The director is constantly surrounding Bogrum with an air of mystery that is never explained. And there is an actor, Frank Hayes, erstwhile Sennett comic, who brings his funny face to the role of the man Bogrum maltreated. Evidently he was intended for comedy relief but he seldom supplies it. Hughie Mack is also present as head of the family that takes possession of Betty's property but why Bogrum approves of their running it to ruin is another point that goes without explanation.

Others are Edwin Stevens, Mayme Kelso, Fanny Midgley, Juluanne Johnson, Anna Hernandez, Henry Woodward, Frankie Raymond and W. H. Bainbridge.

Short of Advertising Possibilities as Well as a Poor Entertainer

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Seeing It Through" has no outstanding feature to advertise it and it is just as well, as the type of entertainment it provides is exceedingly far below par. Most crowds are going to be exceedingly disappointed in it for they are going to look for a story as the scenes click by and find none. At about the middle point they're going to be pretty mad.

Zasu Pitts may have looked promising as a player to a feature or star in previous pictures but she certainly isn't given a fair chance in the way of direction or part in the present instance and her performance is quite colorless.

AS A WHOLE.....Effort to point a moral falls flat mainly because one of the characters is so ridiculously far fetched.
STORY.....Not new to the screen and doesn't provide adequate opportunity for the star.
DIRECTION.....Comedy touches don't get over and allowed one or two incongruities.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Clear
CAMERA WORK .....Up to the standard
STAR.....Doesn't reach the height of her capabilities in this.
SUPPORT.....Lawson Butt too "actory;" some poorly suited types.
EXTERIORS....Seldom used; London street scene good.
DETAIL.....No serious errors in production but several flaws in story.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....The moral of "your sister and somebody else's sister."
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

The author's idea of pointing a moral through "The Loves of Letty" is not glaring with originality since the same theme has been used many times heretofore in screen productions. Even at that the picture might have had a less disconcerting influence if the character played by Lawson Butt had not been made so contradictory. He declares his love for Pauline, a shop girl, but advises her to accept the marital offer of her impossible "boss" because he (Butt) is already married. Then on top of this he later begs her to accept the comforts of his home and almost in the same breath condemns his married sister for running away with another man, comparing her to a "shop girl."

Then the character of the "boss" was made utterly impossible by his comedy appearance and actions. True, the author intended that he should disgust Pauline, but the character was certainly overdrawn and at one time particularly the actions of the "boss" bordered almost on the stap-stick.

Pauline was employed in the office of Willard Louis where she accidentally made the acquaintance of Butt, a wealthy idler, famous for his "past." The acquaintance ripens into friendship and finally into love while Pauline starves herself in order to buy pretty clothes to keep up with her wealthy admirer. John Bowers, a struggling young artist, living in the same house as Pauline, is also in love with her.

In a fit of desperation Pauline agrees to marry her "boss" when Butt tells her he cannot marry because his wife refuses to divorce him. But at a dinner celebration in honor of his forthcoming marriage the "boss" becomes so repulsive that Pauline accepts the "inevitable" and goes to Butt, but once more leaves him and goes back to her artist lover who has come up in the world, when Butt refers to his sister as acting like a "shop girl" when she ran off with another.

Pauline Frederick in
"THE LOVES OF LETTY"
Goldwyn

The producers have gotten over the idea of the folly of marrying for wealth rather than love well enough. Also they made a point of the conventions of life not making a great deal of difference to a man except when it strikes home. But then, this is not new stuff. It has been presented in various productions many times in the past few years.

It certainly is not a satisfactory vehicle for Miss Frederick and at no time did she reach the height of her ability in "The Loves of Letty." The character does not even command sympathy at its best moment, if there was such a thing.

Some catchlines you might try are: "She had three lovers. One was wealthy but ugly, one was wealthy but married and the third was a real man but poor. Which one did she marry? See Pauline Frederick in 'The Loves of Letty,' her latest Goldwyn picture." Or, "He was offering her everything but marriage but condemned his own sister for falling as he would have her fall. Pauline Frederick in 'The Loves of Letty' learns a lesson in her latest Goldwyn production at the blank theater."

"INFERIOR MATERIALS"

When there is a shortage of raw materials or operating costs are high, as is the case now in all Film Laboratories, the first result the Producer need fear is the substitution of cheaper and usually inferior raw materials. AS A WHOLE.....Moderately entertaining picture dealing with women who look upon men as slaves for their support.
STORY.....Adapted from Red Book Magazine serial.
DIRECTION.....Very natural; has registered all points very well with good touches of humor
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Very good
LIGHTINGS .....Commendable
CAMERA WORK .....Good

DETAIL ..... Satisfactory
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Awakening of selfish girl who proves herself capable as business woman.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,721 feet

Rupert Hughes must have had a lot of fun slamming the fair sex when he wrote "The Thirteenth Commandment." He painted most of them as parasites living off their fathers or husbands and generally adhering to "their places in the home" without doing much in return. The heroine of his story eventually woke up, however, and proved herself able to earn her living before she married.

The story has been very well developed and brought out on the screen what with the capable treatment it has received from both scenarist and director and will probably register very satisfactorily before most audiences and particularly before those composed of married folk who will see the humorous side of the story as well as its darts of truth.

Daphne Kipp daughter of a slaving father and a mother who never heard of the thirteenth commandment "thou shalt not spend more than thou earnst" is engaged to a man she believes rich but turns out to be poor. This she discovers after he has taken her to dinner and walked her home as he didn't have money enough for a taxi. This is a most human and humorous sequence.

Daphne realizes that it is up to her to prove that she can earn her own living and, after a trial on the stage in which she proves a miserable failure (another human and humorous bit) she opens a store with a friend for outfitting brides. This proves a success and when her fiance finally comes to her and says he has enough money to marry, she greets him with the remark that she also has.

The lives of Daphne's brother and his extravagant wife are interwoven with this action and their many conflicting scenes furnish more food for thought and smiles. In fact there is much that is human about "The Thirteenth Commandment." Bits keep cropping out throughout.

Miss Clayton fairs happily with the role of Daphne and her supporting cast is competent throughout including Charles Meredith, Monte Blue, Anna Nilsson, Irving Cummings, Winter Hall, Lucille Ward and Arthur Maude.

A Great Subject for Advertising to the Married Folks

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You certainly ought to be able to frame some attractive advertisments for this picture and there is no reason why it shouldn't get over very well with most all audiences. Advertise it as a picture "For married people and those about to be married" and use some catch lines embracing the so-called thirteenth commandment and also take a slap at the ladies with such a line as "Showing up that class of married women who consider their husbands only when it comes to the pocket-book." It won't offend, and moreover it will attract and attract even those women.

Treat the picture lightly for it has many laughs mixed in with its truths and touches of comedy in exploiting it will help. Of course feature the name of Rupert Hughes, the author, and the fact that the story once ran serially in the Red Book. And then with the name of Ethel Clayton and the interest-arousing title of the picture, you ought to have a box office combination hard to beat.

Some Short Reels

"The Land of Opportunity," Republic

"The Land of Opportunity," the Selznick Americanization picture revealed his week at four of the Broadway picture houses, provides a study of Abraham Lincoln rendered by Ralph Ince that, to say the least, is interesting.

The picture opens with a scene in a modern club where Merton Walpole, a parlor Bolshevist, is decrying the state of the nation's affairs. William, an old servant of the club, tells him a story of Abraham Lincoln in the days of 1858 when he was a speaker and lawyer. How Lincoln refused the request of his campaign managers and failed to move on to the next town when he heard that a certain widow's son was on trial for murder and how he defended him successfully on realizing his innocence, makes a human interest episode that was greeted with considerable applause by the Rialto spectators.

Mr. Ince's study of Lincoln is dignified and careful, and as he has selected a period in his life considerably before the time he was made President, he lays himself open to little criticism.

The story, while it is interesting and human, hardly preaches any gospel of Americanism or even faintly suggests it, excepting that Lincoln's character is embodied in the production.

"Fifty-Fifty," Universal

Creditable situations, comedy and actions interwoven in an acceptable story from the pen of Dorothy Lockport, make this a worth-while western. Hoot Gibson plays the lead, and is supported by Mildred Moore, who plays opposite him, George Field, Tote Duero and others who do good work. Alfred Latham cranked the camera and Reeves Eason, who directed maintained a very fast tempo. Fault may be found with the theme, which encourages mistrust in others, but otherwise, this meets with all of the requirements of the successful offerings of this sort. It possesses suspense, and is otherwise up to the mark.

"Tropical Fish," Tyrad

Fish of the tropics are unfamiliar enough to justify their being screened, and most of this, in spite of the fact that it evidently has been made in some acquarium, has been photographed well. They did, however, slip up twice. The scenes at the start take the spectator to what is announced as warm country, and then comes the plunge, showing the fish in one of the rivers. It might have been easy to overlook the bit of deception, until climbing perch were announced. These creatures, according to one of the titles, move up proturberances. And that is where slip number one occurs. Strings by which the fish are pulled up are plainly visible, so much so, that it is really laughable. The other shows the reflection of the cameraman in the glass. With these two portions cut out, the reel can get by, because although many who see it will know just how they secured the material, it is interesting and will hold attention. One of the "Wonders of Nature" series.

"Sheriff Nell's Comeback," Fox

Polly Moran returns to her favorite role of Sheriff Nell in this two-reel Sunshine comedy, which is replete with excellently staged bits. A few of the stunts offered may lack originality, but there is so much new and clever stuff, and a portion toward the close shot on the roofs of several high buildings which is so effective, that the subject is certain to register. Some of the falls and stunts high in the air have been screened so as to provide as many thrills as possible and are truly remarkable. The scene in which the entire police force receives the electric treatment, that in which the coppers are blown into the street through a pneumatic tube, the chase high up and other parts all hold the eye and make this a corking comedy.

"The Plumbers," Fox

Not only is the gag sprung at the end of this animated Mutt and Jeff cartoon an old one, but much of it lacks real comedy business. Some of the shots may be objected to. The scene showing the woman taking her bath with Mutt, unwillingly forced to look on, and others, are risque. More care should be exercised, for stuff of that sort seldom meets with approval. There are some laughs.

"The Sheriff's Oath," Universal

Hoot Gibson, who with Josephine Hill is co-starred in this two-reel western, is not given the opportunity to engage in the usual stunts given him, and the offering depends on the suspense and pathos it possesses rather than on action. And there is enough suspense, but some of the details connected with the averted execution of Arthur Mackley are certainly gruesome, and the atmosphere created decidedly unpleasant. Burt S. Franks, in the role of villain, gives a creditable performance and most of the others hold their ends up in good style. Some of the stuff, however, is neither entertaining nor gripping and should be curtailed.

"Koreaing Around Korea," Chester

One of the recent Chester releases, called "The People in White," dealt with the Koreans. This is another reel shot in Korea, as the title indicates, and is a satisfactory travel offering. Charles Hugo was the cameraman and his work for the greater part is up to the mark. Included in the offering are a nuptial ceremony, footage devoted to the people at some of their work and matter of general interest.

"Runnin' Straight," Universal

Phillip Hubbard has written a story for Hoot Gibson that takes him out of his usual element and places him in a role quite unusual. Instead of being the good man who ultimately routs the villain, he starts out as a newly-released convict who is converted by a bar-room maid and agrees to become honest. Art Flaven who directed handled the story in good style and brought it to a near-climax which offered a fine opportunity for something that could be called different. And they did turn out a conclusion that is different, but so much so—so utterly inappropriate, that the finish is unsatisfactory. The staging, the camera work and the rest of the technical end of it is up to the mark, in spite of a few slight slips, and the story moves along well until the end is approached, when it peters out.

"Majic Clay," Prizma—Republic

Factories are usually dismal places, and seldom present a pleasing appearance without, and more seldom within. Overlooking Cincinnati, however, there is the Rookwood Pottery, which not only presents a spectacle pleasing to the eye outwardly, but is just as neat inside. There, the artistic manner in which skilled hands fashion the delicate vases—the manner in which they seem to grow from small heaps of clay to the finished works of beauty is shown. At times there is a bit of fringe apparent, but the coloring is unusually good most of the time, and the photography, attended to by George E. Stone, also meritorious. The closing shots showing the various completed vases, painted in various colors, are quite fascinating.

"Save Me Sadie," Christie

Hokum and more or less mild slapstick comedy makes up this Christie production, featuring Eddie Barry, and including in the cast Helen Darling, Fay Lemport, Earl Rodney, Edith Clarke and others. From almost the very start to the finish, the various incidents draw laughs in profusion. The situations are clever, the bits of business funny and woven properly into the story, the theme satisfactory and the manner in which the offering has been screened suitable. Almost any audience will consider it funny.

"Broadway Will Be Broadway," Chester

Richard Hait cranked the camera for this Chester reel, which takes the spectator along one of the South American rivers, and then has a considerable portion of it dealing with sheep. The production lags somewhat in places, but in the latter potrion has much that appeals, the spectacle of the flock of sheep will hold attention. It is a sort of combination of scenic and travel offering and one that should get a good-sized amount of booking.

Short Reels

"Aids to Cupid," Prizma-Republic

Grasse, a small town in France, specializes in the manufacturing of perfumes, there being sixty factories where scented liquids are produced there according to a caption on this reel, and rose petal candy. This includes several outdoor shots, which appear somewhat dull due to lack of proper lighting. It has, however, a goodly amount of footage that is colored well, and the subject matter is of sufficient interest to get it by.

"Held Up for the Makins," Universal

More comedy than usual, and a full-sized amount of action, place this two reel western, in which Hoot Gibson has the featured role, in the meritorious class. In houses playing offerings of this sort, it should secure booking, for although it is not the sort of picture that the large houses may be expected to play, it should satisfy audiences which like short westerns, youngsters mainly. The story centers about a tobacco famine in a western town, and when the weed is finally shipped, a young and luckless fellow holds up the stage, mistaking it for gold. In the end, the fury of the folks is aroused and Hoot Gibson, by distributing the little sacks of tobacco over the scenery diverts the attention of those who could lay rude hands on the brother of the girl he loves. It ends when he kisses her at the point of a gun.

"My Dog Pal," Universal

Brownie, styled "the wonder dog" is a clever canine, and does some creditable work in this two reeler. The human characters also do much that is funny, but there is too great a quantity of material that is not really laughable. At the start, there is a very clever bit which shows a goat eating an old man's lengthy beard. After that, there is little of any real value. Just a fair comedy.

"Can You Beat It," Hall Room Boy Comedies

Comedy business that is out of the ordinary, and a reasonably good story are what will put this two reeler over. If it had a goodly amount of rapid action in addition, it would probably be a sure fire hit, but it is to be regretted that it is lacking therein. In addition, the lightings and photography in a few places are not fully up to the mark, and this has to rely on the fact that it is unusual in many respects to hold its own. At the start, the scene in which the taller of the boys clips the hair of his partner with the aid of a bowl draws a laugh. The bit where the boys with the aid of a net, manage to collect some coins that are being tossed into the water for boys to duck for is also original, as are several others. In the part devoted to the magic, there is not so much new stuff, but some of it is funny, and it has been screened so as to provoke some mirth. This is not up to the standard set in some of the better Hall Room Boy releases, but it is an acceptable comedy.

"A Wild Night," Universal

In Joe Martin, the trained ape, Universal has an asset. The animal possesses an unusual amount of natural intelligence, performs his different stunts in a manner that suggests thought rather than the following of a routine, and injects the element of novelty into the two reel comedies in which he is the center of attraction. In this production, in addition to Joe, they have a lion which does quite a bit of work, and an elephant also appears, adding color to the two reeler. As far as the story is concerned, this does not rise very much above the ordinary, and the portion in which the lion appears has been drawn out a trifle longer than was wise. Al Santell who produced it, has seen to it that a sufficient variety of bits of business was furnished the stellar performer, and this makes "A Wild Night" worth while. The scenes in which Joe Martin consumes a large quantity of punch, is angered by his reflection in a mirror, proposes to a stout woman, plays checkers and others are all funny.

"The Song of the Paddle," Educational

So far, each one of the new series of Robert C. Bruce scenics has been a commendable offering. This one, however, shows a falling off as far as the choice of material is concerned. Certainly, it lacks the natural beauty of the others. Until almost the very end, the scenes selected are not such as to draw exclamations from an audience. There is much that fascinates in the course of the canoe which is followed throughout, and the few closing shots, taken towards the sun, are really praiseworthy. Unfortunately, however, there is too much that is dull, and the atmosphere during a great part of the piece is not very gratifying.

"India, Land of Mystery," Educational

Educational's "Library De Luxe" releases, hand-colored issues, have not been such as to cause great enthusiasm at times. In this one, fault may also be found with the tinting in places, but its good points overshadow its bad ones by a wide margin. At the start, there are shots of some of the temples, and one portion devoted to the gathering of water-lilies that holds attention, although the coloring of the sky is rather poor. After that there are more bits of real merit, and some stuff concerning the shooting of a pair of crocodiles. The closing portion, in which several kittens and a pair of pups figure, will appeal of course. If you cannot use the entire reel, you should be able to use the latter portion. One of the best of this series, tells the story of the production.

"The Heart Snatcher," Sunshine-Fox

There is nothing greatly unusual about this two reeler from the Sunshine studios. It has the usual number of gags, some old and some new, a little less than the alotted slapstick plot, and is played appropriately by Jack Cooper, Marvel Rea, Harry Booker, Bobbie Dunn and Kewpie Morgan. Probably the best laugh in it is caused by the manhandling of an old automobile. Parts of it fall off as it goes over a rough road but they are all miraculously thrown in place again by use of some clever trick camera work. The windup brings in the usual chase which offers little that is new. Altogether an average slapstick offering. Roy Del Ruth and K. G. McLean directed while the latter also took a hand at the camera.

"Screenics," No. 3, Chester

Russian wolfhounds occupy the screen in the first of the two sections making up the third of Chester's "Screenics." The title of that portion, "Barks and Skippers," is intended to mislead, just as a bit of good-natured fun. In the part thus titled, the dogs are shown making some really startling leaps and in various attitudes. Oliver Herford comments on "Men, Monkeys and Human Beings" in the second portion, which includes several rhymes and other humorous bits. This is up to the standard of the other issues of the series.

"Fishing" Fox

A Mutt and Jeff comedy not as clever as the average run of this series. Mutt and Jeff go fishing with Cicero, Mutt's boy. While Jeff and Cicero are chasing a fish all over the landscape, Mutt carries on a flirtation with a peach in a bathing suit. Cicero comes along with a friendly skunk and a good bit of comedy is derived from this animal. Finally Cicero tells his ma about Mutt's flirtations while an officer brings the little fellow to grief for fishing on private grounds.

"Moosing the Kipaws," Chester.

Canada has much inspiring territory. It has spots where the tall evergreens, rising against backgrounds of swiftly moving streams, furnish scenes that are impressive and beautiful. Using a search for a moose as an excuse for wandering up into the Dominion, and screening some corking water stuff, Chester, with Willard Vander Veer, acting as cameraman, has turned out one of his best scenics in a long while. It includes some very unusual shots of untamed white-tailed deer, a moose, and other bits, that should make it worth your while to see it when you need anything of this sort.

28 WD 2/14/20

Short Reels

Pathe Review, No. 38

Five parts make up this Pathe Review, which lacks any particular portion that stands out or is of unusual interest. It opens with a tinted scenic part, follows with some footage dealing with ants, a section concerning river lights, a colored slow motion study in which a well groomed horse occupies the center of the screen and a modern Egyptian dance interpreted by Madame Zamura. It hits an even pace and does not differ very much from some of the recent Pathe reviews.

"Waltz Me Around," Pathe

Each new Snub Pollard release includes new and funny bits of business, is screened in good style and shows the star working with enough enthusiasm, but the weakness evident so often before in this series is again apparent here. The production lacks a strong plot and the various bits, which are at times laughable, are not sufficiently clever to place this in the hit class. Pollard is funny as the driver of the van, with his darkey compatriot and a goat on the vehicle accompanying him. A considerable part shows a dancing school, with unconventionally attired damsels, but here there is not very much novelty. As a whole, it is just a bit better than the average one reel comedy.

Bray Pictograph, 423, Goldwyn

Bray Pictograph, No. 423, has three parts of more than usual interest. Opening it is a portion devoted to the formation of dew, including several interesting shots, through magnifying apparatus. Gutzon Borglum, famous sculptor, is shown at work in the second part, which also includes scenes showing some of his works, now completed. The Debut of Thomas Cat, announced as the world's first color cartoon on a caption, closes and is out of the ordinary and should go well in houses attended by youngsters. The coloring has been done fairly well and adds value.

"Screen Follies," No. 5, Capital

F. A. A. Dahme and Louis Seel, who are turning out the Screen Follies for Capital, in producing issue No. 5, have seen to it that some of the women drawn have more drapery on their persons than in some of the preceding reels, and have bolstered the offering generally to the extent that it is now in shape to draw laughter. Some of the stuff is very funny, the entire reel distinctly novel, as are all of these issues, and as a whole, ready to go into the moderate-sized houses and create a good impression.

"Pennywise," Prizma-Republic

Not very long ago, several short Prizma subjects were presented at the Capitol. These were novelties and were not general releases. Now Prizma has taken some of these bits and joined them together into an interesting reel, which is colored splendidly throughout. It depicts some of the uses of wax that are somewhat uncommon, those shown being bead making, and coating of vases. Fashioning a lamp from paper, making artificial flowers and a few other occupations are also shown. Ordinarily, there would be nothing unusual about such an offering, but this is colored so as to hold the eye.

"Bedlam," Gaiety Comedies

From the very start, the photography and camera work of this reel are of xceptional merit. It includes numerous long shots that have been screened so as to hold the eye. The story starts out as though it were going to be a riot, and it is funny enough, until the very finish, when after placing Billy Fletchr, featured with Vera Reynolds, in a situation that possesses many possibilities the film is wound up in a manner that will give one cause to think they didn't make the best of the opportunity. There are some minor incogruities, and in the portion, where what has happened before is reproduced on the screen within the theater, they go too much into detail. That slows it up a bit, but taken as a whole, the offering measures up to a sufficiently high standard to get over.

"On the Inside," Dooley Comedies—Tyrad.

Due to the lack of a novel plot and really novel situations, what would otherwise be an acceptable comedy, fails to score in a number of places. Johnny Dooley, who is starred and furnishes most of the fun while disguised as an old maid, engaged to chaperone three girls, carefully guarded by a jealous father, works ardently and the girls are attractive. It is just a fair two reeler that will get by in some of the smaller houses, but is not sufficiently out of the ordinary to go over in the better theaters.

Monkey Shines," Christie

Eddie Barry, is featured together with Earl Rodney and Helen Darling in a fairly clever comedy, built on the "Monkey Gland" theory, the granted glands causing both Barry and his ancient wife to cut capers and embark on a second honeymoon. Most of it is rube comedy and hokum, in which Barry is prominent. It is slapstick stuff combined with an acceptable theme and should satisfy the average audience.

"A Saphead's Sacrifice," Gaiety Comedies

Included in this Gaiety reel are many incidents and bits of business that are funny and well acted by Billy Fletcher, featured with Vera Reynolds, and another performer, not credited. The scenes wherein Fletcher, and the Kentucky colonel occupy accidentally the same bed, are unusually funny, and the portion devoted to Fletcher's escapade with the bass violinist, includes some stuff that will draw laughter. There is a weakness in the plot as far as the girl is concerned, she being left out of the story after the early part of the picture, but as it is, the piece possesses a considerable quantity of laugh-provoking bits that discount its faults and make it worth while.

"Ruined by Love," Gaiety Comedies.

George Ovey has been provided with a very thin theme in this reel, the conclusion of this hinging largely on the fact that the name of one of the girls in the story is Chlorine, and a play on that word extricates him from a dismal situation. It has some funny material and one bit of trick photography, but little of it is out of the ordinary and the material does not often give reason for mirth.

"It Takes a Crook," Christie.

Dorothy Devore and Jimmy Harrison are featured in a Christie one reeler that arouses interest at the start and has several creditable situations. It all centers about a pair of supposed crooks, male and female, after removing their respective valuables, find each other out and fall in love. There is also another romance, between their assistants, which is not reallyl important enough to occupy the space given it, and the conclusion is not very logical. But it has much really humorous material, enough, in fact, to enable the offering to register a number of laughs.

"Ducks," Christie.

Built about a very conventional plot, with only one or two novel twists that are actually of minor importance, this Christie offering is not likely to cause any great enthusiasm. Earl Rodney and Helen Darling are featured in it, and while their work is satisfactory enough, neither is called upon to do anything out of the ordinary. The weakness of the theme of the offering will prevent it from getting very far, for from almost the beginning, the finish is quite obvious.

"A Call Loan," Vitagraph

Stories in which feminine characters do not appear do not as a rule adapt themselves any too well for screen production. In filming this O. Henry story, however, Vitagraph has turned out a very satisfactory offering, which has a capable cast and holds attention from beginning to end. The conclusion does come rather suddenly, as do all of O. Henry's, but the general merit of the tale, the capable cast and commendable production values all serve to put this in a class with the best of the two reelers of this series. It possesses sentiment, one great thrill, and leads up to a rather sudden, but well brought out climax.

"In Higher Spheres," Ford-Goldwyn

Starting with a mountain scenic, this Ford release has its last 300 feet or so devoted to the making of women's hosiery. The section at the start has much that is of high order and is somewhat better than the average scenic offering. What follows furnishes a rather sharp contrast to it and is conventional industrial stuff.

Exhibitors Back Stoll

Decide Goldwyn's Stand Does Not Warrant British Support

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

London, England—The eagerly awaited reply of Goldwyn to Jeffrey Bernerd's allegations regarding the Goldwyn-Stoll contract has arrived here.

A private meeting of the Council of Kinematograph Renters' Society was held at which the entire correspondence of the Stoll interests with Goldwyn was gone over. The Council voted to support Bernerd unqualfiedly.

A sub-committee was appointed to meet the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association and as a result of that meeting Stoll was pledged the association's support.

The Goldwyn rejoinder to Stoll's charges places emphasis on the fact that the former contracted for 12 productions, while Bernerd maintains that the contract called for 18. On that basis, according to Bernerd, he made his contract with the British exhibitors.

Goldwyn maintains that the contract could not have called for 18, since the last six were not yet completed when Bernerd was not in New York.

To offset Goldwyn's stand, Bernerd states that he actually saw the six productions in a theater in New York, although Goldwyn stated they were not completed. Bernerd says he has in his possession a cablegram from Mr. Goldwyn which actually mentions that 18 productions were included in the deal.

Bernerd claims to have in his possession two contracts which were drawn up while he was in New York. He says the first did not contain a clause which would prevent him from getting the six productions around which the controversy rages.

The other, says Bernerd, was drawn up at a later date and contained the objectionable clause. This Bernerd refused to sign.

Famous Players at Capitol

The Capitol Theater has booked "Black Is White," a Dorothy Dalton subject produced by Famous Players for the week beginning March 7.

This is the first Paramount Artcraft production to play that theater and the news that the booking had been made caused some speculation on Saturday.

It was rather generally taken that the move had no special significance only so far as it indicated the scarcity of independent productions in the market.

Loew Stock Listed

The New York Stock Exchange has admitted to list temporary certificates numbering 42,857 of the capital stock of Loew's, Inc.

The listing is a temporary one because of the fact that the bank note companies are so far behind in printing permanent issues that a temporary stock is first admitted and the permanent as soon as the printing is completed.

The Gaumont offices admitted that there was a possibility of his coming here, but stated that no definite date had been set for the visit. Gaumont's last trip was in 1915.

F. P. Denies Report

Nathan Friend, speaking for Famous Players, stated on Saturday that there was nothing to the report that the Famous Players industrials and educationals had been sold to Harry Levey, manager of the Universal's Industrial Department. Mr. Friend said:

"There is absolutely nothing to that report."

Asked whether Famous would continue its Industrial Department, Friend stated:

"We are in business now, in a very healthy state. We certainly intend continuing."

He expects to be gone six weeks and will visit New Orleans, Atlanta, Richmond, Dallas, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, St. Louis and Kansas City.

In the Courts

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has reversed a decision of the lower court denying an injunction for the Standard Slide Corp. against George Appell, the Broadway Slide Co., and the Excelsior Illustrating Co. In deciding that the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction the Appellate Division decided that Appell sold his business of manufacturing slides to the plaintiff and in doing so he agreed that he would not engage in a similar business with any competitor for five years. The court rules that whether he engages in such a business as principal or only employee he violates the covenant and the court will enjoin such violation.

In the suit of Sidney Reynolds against John A. Forney the defendant has filed an answer in the Supreme Court admitting that plaintiff was an officer of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., and that he was a director of A. Harry Moore & Co., but denies that he was the owner of the story, "Brewster's Mysterious Millions," and denies all other allegations.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Los Angeles, Cal.—When "Blind Husbands" was presented at the Superba, the management held a "Blind Husband Contest." Women were invited to write their experiences with or what they knew about blind husbands. Five prizes, ranging from $25 in cash to annual passes to the house, were offered. The ad was run under a seven column head in the Record, as follows: "Look! Confessions of a Blind Husband Who Awoke! Prize Contest." In the matter beneath the spread was careful mention of the film, which served to interest the crowds.

Omaha, Neb.—When the Fairbanks production, "When the Clouds Roll By," was being run simultaneously at the Moon and Muse, Manager R. S. Ballantyne put over an exploitation stunt that packed both houses. A large truck, decorated with banners and cut-outs advertising the production with a half dozen musicians within it was paraded down the busiest street, and there were 1,000 balloons, each bearing a complimentary ticket, admitting two for either house. An army of 100 boys marched after it, each bearing a sandwich for the film, and a force of men filled the balloons with gas, turning them loose. The stunt, which had been advertised in the dailies, attracted widespread attention and the mob became so excited that it stormed the truck, tore the banners from it and appropriated all of the available passes. The boys in the parade had been hired for one ticket each, and it all cost about $60, not counting the tickets which were returned for admissions. Ballantine also used a large Jack-in-the-box and dummy of Fairbanks in front of his houses.

CONFESSION

CONTINUES TO BREAK RECORDS

Every day "THE CONFESSION" sets a new Box Office Record in Some Locality.

We've told you what it did in New England States, California, Wisconsin, Canada, etc.

NOW READ THIS

February 13, 1920.

Mr.J. Brandt,
National Film Corp.,
1600 Broadway,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

We have just finished a record breaking week with THE CONFESSION at the Garden Theatre, Paterson, N. J. I consider it one of the strongest and most ripping plays that we have ever presented.

The entire City irrespective of race or religion was enthusiastic over THE CONFESSION. In spite of rainy weather, we held them out to the sidewalk every night in the week.

With more pictures like THE CONFESSION, we have nothing to fear for the future of this industry.

Wishing you every success, I remain

Very truly yours,
(Signed) Chas. L. Dooley

Concerning
Edward Small, Inc.

The Edward Small organization appreciates the coveted position to which it has risen in the motion picture field.

We know now, more than ever, that we must render a distinct service to the producer.

We did not spring "full blown" into being. Nothing of the sensational has attended our growth, nor has the element of chance contributed to our success.

We have continually prospered in a field strewn with the wreckage of transient competition.

That we have prospered and outdistanced organizations begun, apparently, with similar intent, is due we believe, to constant fidelity to the high resolve with which we entered the lists. That resolve was to render a service of such business like character to the producer, the artist and the author, upon whom our success is dependent, that we should come to be considered, by each and all, as essential to their highest individual and collective good.

The work of Edward Small, Inc., has been done in a new, but in a well-thought-out way. The artist, the author and the producer know that through us, they can transact business with a clean-cut business result. In our capacity of liaison between producer, artist and author, it is our business to represent, not only artists of known ability, in a way that the producer is kept in constant touch with their activities, but to bring new faces and new artists to the attention of the producer, and so represent, the heretofore unrecognized.

We live in a world where nothing is permanent—but change. A fickle motion picture public demands new loves each day. As the world goes 'round old people die and new are born to take their places, so in the Motion Picture World, old personalities wear out and new ones must necessarily be found to replace them.

Among artists, in a peculiar sense, only the fittest survive over long periods of glory and become standardized, and in an industry of such proportions as that of motion pictures, the needs of today, are doubled day after tomorrow.

A constant stream of new artists, of whom new things can be said and for whom new interest can be created, must pass into the studios and be utilized in productions.

An important function of Edward Small, Inc., is to acquaint the producer with these artists, new and old.

We have attempted in the past, and are highly resolved for the future to do this liaison work between the artist and the producer, and the author and the producer with such expedition and completeness that neither can afford to leave us out of the reckoning.

Faithfully,

Edward Small

B U T —As this is too great a picture to throw on the market in the usual way —too magnificent and costly a photoplay to let it ride along the easy waves of the ordinary distributing channel,

THEREFORE—We want this production to receive the same lavish care in distribution that it had while in production. It was written, adapted, directed, portrayed and photographed by persons with BRAINS, and we want a man with Brains to see that it is marketed in a manner befitting "The Aristocrat of Features."

YOU may be the man!

Children's Bill

Only One of Many Matters to Be Taken Up at Utica Convention

When exhibitors assemble for their State Convention on March 9 and 10, they will be invited to give their views on some of the most important motion picture bills ever proposed in the Legislature.

The one subject which will enlist the attention of every exhibitor and on which definite action will be taken before the convention adjourns, is the Children's Bill (as it is called). This bill repeals that section of the Penal Code which makes it a misdemeanor to admit minors, actually or apparently under the age of 16.

At the hour of going to press a joint committee of the F. I. L. M. Club [illegible] the Exhibitors' League of [illegible] was discussing in the Pathe exchange the question of mounted posters. New Exhibitor Organization Being Formed in Greater New York—Control 450 Days' Booking

Plans have been progressing quietly in the past few weeks for the banding together of a number of exhibitors in the metropolitan district—New York City, Long Island and northern New Jersey in a new organization with a total number of booking days to date of from 450 to 500. Although the body is as yet in a temporary stage, the membership reaches 152.

The idea is William Brandt's, one of the best known exhibitors in Brooklyn and president of the Brooklyn Exhibitors' League. Brandt has been elected temporary president of the organization which is to be known as the Theater Owners' Chamber of Commerce.

The organization's scope will be two-fold; one for special intercourse between exhibitors and secondly for the transaction of business affairs. A campaign will be immediately started to secure a uniform form of contract from exchanges.

At a luncheon in the Astor, the members voted against the percentage system of booking. Brandt stated yesterday that the members voted not to show "Pollyanna" a United Artists—Mary Pickford release and that the company was urbs of Berlin with a large cast and elaborate sets. Other films made in Scandinavia, England and Italy have been secured.

L. Auerbach, speaking for Export and Import stated yesterday that the move was a result of the precarious exchange situation now existing abroad which meant nothing but large losses for the American exporter.

The foreign situation, from observations made, is apparently in a serious condition. One exporter who recently returned from England and the Continent is known to have made the remark that 80 per cent. of the American exporters will be out of business in a year, unless something is done.

A partial solution to the problem has been suggested in that exporters grant long-term credits to the foreign buyers.

Mr. Auerbach's remarks, it will be noticed, are in line with the general opinions expressed by P. A. Powers, who pointed out the danger existing in the present rates of exchange.

Gordon Laid Up with Influenza

Boston, Mass.—Nathan Gordon, First National franchise holder for New England has been laid up with the "flu", but that has not hampered his plans for a new 4,000 seat house, to be completed by Jan. 1, 1921. It will be devoted to pictures exclusively and will be the largest theater in New Engand and will be situated near the corner of Washington and Milk St.

into a motion picture theater. The phraseology of the law "actually or apparently" under 16 years of age, has been a source of harrassing experiences to exhibitors, especially in New York City where it is enforced with drastic severity. It is said that the Gerry Society is not averse to a substantial modification of the present law.

In addition to the Children's Bill action will be taken on hostile legislation now pending or about to be introduced. One of these bills, said to be advocated by a very conspicuous reformer, provides for intermissions of one hour each between every performance in the motion picture theater. Plans to defeat censorship legislation will also be discussed.

Rights on "The Confession" Sold

Dad Abrams of San Francisco has bought the rights for Illinois and Indiana, Cuba and Mexico for "The Confession," from J. H. Davis.

Selano and Dewhurst bought Colorado, Utah and New Mexico.

In the Courts

Supreme Court Justice Platzek has vacated the service of the papers in the suit of the law firm of Hirsh, Sherman & Limberg against the Master Productions, Inc., an English corporation, on the ground that the defendant is not doing business in this state and the service of the summons on Emil Wertheimer as a director was not a legal service. The attorneys sue for fees.

In the suit of Winfield Kelly against the Maritime Pictures Corp. and the Navy Films Service Inc., for an accounting of all moneys received by the Maritime under a contract made originally in behalf of the Navy Films Service, and an injunction restraining the collection of further sums, Justice Bijur grants the application. Kelly sued as a stockholder of Navy Films. The court stated that not to embarrass the Maritime in carrying on its business of supplying films to battleships it may give a bond of deposit money to protect Kelly's third interest in Navy Flms.

Milton M. Goldsmith stated yesterday that he had satisfied his part of the claim of $2,040 entered against him and several other by the Shawmut Commercial Paper Co.

Regarding Master Films, Inc.

Charles C. Burr, president of Master Films, Inc. has issued the following: —

"It has come to my attention that there are rumors on the film rialto regarding the personnel of Master Films, Inc. For the information of all concerned, Master Films, Inc. was organized by myself in conjunction with the following gentlemen who are directors of the corporation: E. J. Clode, book publisher Sigfried Hart, manufacturer, Alexander Grosset, publisher.

"Together, we own the entire stocks of the corporation, and at no time has anybody else been associated with us in the formation or the executive personnel of this corporation.

"This should effectually put to rest any rumors regarding this concern."

First Film in 1894

Produced by Alexander Black—Paramount Magazne Reproduces Picture

A series of original slides used b Alexander Black in 1894 which a said to be the first attempt at mo tion pictures are reproduced in Pa amount Magazine No. 3874, a curre release.

Howard I. Young, editor of th magazine said yesterday that Blac used what are to-day known as stil and by means of a gas projector a lowed each still to be flashed on th screen for about five seconds. Ea succeeding picture was then di solved into the next so that an a pearance of motion by the characte was secured.

Black first exhibited the pictu which was called "Miss Jerry" Oct. 9, 1894, while he stationed hi self at the screen explaining t action and speaking for all the ch acters. The operator was Tracy Tisdell.

The first film ran about 45 m utes and Black used about 250 sti in the picture. In the magazi Paramount uses about 16 of the or inal stills of which about three f each were taken and then through the dissolving process. Young states that Mr. Black clares the effect to be the same he originally obtained in 1894.

It is interesting to note the h in the films was William Courtn and the heroine Blanche Bayliss.

Paramount calls the reproduct the "Evolution of the Picture Pl which has been arranged with Black's permission.

In addition to the stills tak from "Miss Jerry" the magazi contains scenes showing Gro Cleveland at his desk in the Wh House. This film was titled "C ital Courtship."

Black who is a novelist of so distinction has written five stor in book form from plays he p duced first as pictures. The last these is "The Great Desire."

About "Ben Hur"

Both United Artists and First National Officials Deny Knowing About Production

Officials of both the United Artists—the Big Four—and the First National denied yesterday knowing anything about certain information which, according to report, developed in the litigation between Harper Bros. and Henry L. Wallace and Klaw & Erlanger.

The value of the picture rights of "Ben Hur" was one of the points developing in the litigation, and correspondence filed showed that Marc Klaw had written Wallace suggesting that the United Artists make the production, and also that First National were ready to produce the picture, guaranteeing the owners $250,000; a figure which Klaw said he believed was the best obtainable. Wallace, who owns a third interest in the picture rights, figures his interest as being worth $400,000, which would make the total value of the rights $1,200,000.

In his decision Judge Hough suggested that the litigants reach an agreement regarding the value of the picture rights.

It has been reported at various times that Griffith wanted to make the picture, and also that the rights were held at $500,000.

THE LUCK of the IRISH

An ALLAN DWAN Production

REALART recognizes but one judge of pictures—the public! What we think isn't worth a picayune as against your Box Office records. We try to provide good pictures, but we are not infallible.

The Public is!

And so Realart puts its pictures up to the public before it puts them up to you.

We have done this twice with "The Luck of the Irish." We first showed it for a week in Sid Grauman's million dollar Los Angeles Theatre. Mr. Grauman assures us it went over with a bang. Since then we have shown it in New York at the big new Capitol Theatre. And it has repeated its Los Angeles success!

Realart, therefore now offers, not its own opinion, or Dwan's opinion, or Mayflower's opinion, but the verdict of the people, as one reason why you should book "The Luck of the Irish."

EXTERIORS.....Beautiful shots of Canadian Northwest.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....A fugitive from justice assumes the role of a member of the Mounted Police who dies after capturing his victim.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

The completion and presentation of "The River's End" has been anticipated with no little degree of interest, inasmuch as it is the initial effort of Mr. Neilan as an independent producer. In his first attempt at "going it alone," Mr. Neilan, both as producer and director deserves the congratulations that he surely will receive.

"The River's End" is surely a Box Office bet. It has all the elements of a B. O. success. Not only because it is big but because there are enough ingredients to suit a variety of interests. The story contains romance, mystery, humaneness and a degree of tragedy with certain sequences to satisfy the lover of thrills.

Derwent Conniston, with the motto of the Royal Northwestern Mounted Police foremost in his mind—"gets his man" after a three year's hunt but before Conniston and his captive, John Keith, reach the post, Conniston dies; but suggests that Keith take his place as a member of the mounted police. Keith takes the big chance and returns to the post as Derwent Conniston with the news that he has captured and buried John Keith.

The post commander, played by Sherry, does not note the substitution. However, Shan Tung, employed because of his peculiar facility for remembering faces, recognizes the deception. He doesn't disclose the fact to the authorities but makes known his discovery to the supposed Conniston himself.

The uncanny yellow man has a strange hold over the daughter of the dead Kirkstone which is not made known until almost the end, and clears up the whole affair. Shan Tung has the girl's brother in his power and knowing that the Chinaman will prove the brother the real murderer of Kirkstone she has agreed to marry the Chinaman. But Conniston (really Keith) comes to the rescue and kills Shan Tung. The mystery element in connection with Shan Tung is particularly effective in its way and affords opportunity for a terrific fight in the den of the Chink.

Lewis Stone is excellent in a dual role and Marjorie Daw is winsome and appealing.

Use Neilan's Name With the Promises You Make

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

There's no need for hesitation when it comes to booking "The River's End." It will please most of the people most of the time if not all of the people all of the time. In other words, it is good all the way through but there are special bits that will have particular appeal for certain tastes.

Outside of its variety of attractions, the picture is good to look at. Much care has been given to artistry and technique in its production. The lightings are decidedly beautiful, particularly the snow scenes.

Use the name of the producer in your advertising, mentioning some of his previous successes and promising them unusual entertainment value in his first independent production. The cast consists of names that in themselves should make them stop, look and listen.

Fine Basic Material and Appreciative Treatment Make This a Comedy Winner

Earle Williams in
"THE FORTUNE HUNTER"
Vitagraph

DIRECTOR ..... Tom Terriss
AUTHOR .....Winchell Smith
SCENARIO BY .....Graham Baker
CAMERAMAN ..... Tom Mallory
AS A WHOLE.....Sure-fire comedy made from famous stage success.
STORY.....Was original when it was new and still holds so; has a lot of story surprises and plenty of laughs.
DIRECTION.....Has built up production with a wealth of sure-fire business; utilizes short, quick scenes which never permit action to drag.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Average
LIGHTINGS ..... Good
CAMERA WORK ....Realistic shots of small town
STAR....Registers surprisingly well in light comedy role.
SUPPORT.....Very good, embracing number of outstanding comedy types.
EXTERIORS ..... Mostly small town stuff
INTERIORS ..... Appropriate
DETAIL.....Lot of comedy business makes picture exceedingly well balanced.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Adventures of city chap in a "hick" town, his success in business and love.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,110 feet

Vitagraph has made a comedy it well may be proud of from Winchell Smith's famous stage success, "The Fortune Hunter." There was some doubt as to how Earle Williams would show in this but he comes through with a breezy light and thoroughly congenial characterization of the Nat Dunham who goes to a "hick" town on a bet and there unwittingly makes a success of himself in business and discovers a real love.

Those concerned in the production certainly handled the material offered in the play with full appreciation. The continuity of the offering is smooth running, the story surprises are exceedingly well handled, while the short, quick scenes employed almost without exception (the which, by the way, are the only kind of scenes to use in making feature comedies) register the points nicely and never allow the interest to drop.

Director Tom Terriss has built up the plot with innumerable bits of business scattered throughout the length of the picture, that bespeak well of his comedy sense. The business is thrown to all the principal characters and thus the picture maintains a delightful balance which might well have been missed had the director insisted always on awarding his star the best bits.

The plot centers around Nat Dunham, a business failure. His pal, Harry Kellogg, successful in Wall Street, enters into a bargain with him. It is that Nat go to some country town, refrain from drinking, smoking and swearing, pledge himself to go to church on Sunday, search for employment, but not too eagerly, and eventually marry the daughter of the richest man in town.

The agreement is a joke but Nat lives up to it until it comes to the marrying part. Here a real romance enters and of course in the end everything turns out all right. The plot itself is not materially strong but there is never a weak moment in it because of the various surprises it brings and the fine business with which it is builded up.

Supporting Mr. Williams is a large cast including Jean Paige, opposite Charles Trowbridge, Van Dyke Brooke, William Holden, Nancy Lee, Earl Metcalfe, Frank Norcross and Billy Hoover.

Here's a Comedy that Deserves Pretty Near the Limit in Advertising

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You all know very well that good feature comedies are one of the scarcest articles on the market, despite the many stellar companies attempting to turn them out. Well, then, go after "The Fortune Hunter" and give it a strong play in your advertising and you're bound to send home very satisfied audiences.

And Vitagraph has given you a well-known play as the basis of this feature, a play which was written by an author who since has gained the very height of his profession. Mention him, Winchell Smith, and tell them about "The Boomerang" and those two great plays that he staged, "Turn to the Right" and "Lightnin'."

The picture itself presents many good advertising opportunities. Small town exhibitors will find the angle of the smart city man learning a lesson in the country particularly attractive to their patrons while the metropolitan audiences will be attracted by the title itself.

PUBLIC NOTICE
to
CROOKED PRODUCERS

By Carl Laemmle, President, Universal Film M'f'g Co.

HEREAFTER when you try to induce artists under contract with the Universal to break their contracts, I shall call you by name. I shall dangle you up before the eyes of the exhibitors of the world and show that these dishonest practices of yours are the direct cause of the frightful increase in the cost of making pictures.

Some of you are now trying to get Mr. Erich von Stroheim because his picture, "Blind Husbands," proves that he is the greatest discovery in years in the matter of directors; and because you have heard that his second picture, "The Devil's Passkey," is even a greater triumph. Unfortunately for you, von Stroheim comes of good old stock and your money and your wiles cannot tempt him from the path of honor.

When Mr. von Stroheim was untried and unknown as a director, why didn't you gamble on him, as the Universal did? Why didn't you have vision enough to see that he had the makings of a great director? Failing to do this, why do you now hang over him like vultures seeking to grab him by hook or crook, with the accent on the crook?

Have you no sense of decency or honor? Don't you know that any profit you might make by causing another man to violate his written word of honor is polluted profit, tainted money which is unfit to spend on your wives and your children? Don't you know that star-stealing or even attempted star-stealing is a specie of pimping which is loathsome in the eyes of civilized men and women?

I serve notice on you here and now that Erich von Stroheim is under contract with the Universal for years to come. And so is Priscilla Dean, whose great production soon to be released will make your smirking mouths water with desire to smash her contract. And so is Harry Carey. And so are Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo, Edith Roberts, Frank Mayo, Tod Browning, Rollin Sturgeon, Jack Ford, Allen Holubar, Dorothy Phillips and Robert Andersen.

Do you imagine that by hiding behind "agents" and fake corporations you can still violate all principle and all honor and continue to get away with it unharmed?

Do you imagine that because the Universal has been long suffering in the past and has never considered any star worth fighting for when that star developed a sense of dishonor, that we will continue to let you pick our pockets hereafter?

Let this sink into your consciousness:—The Universal has engaged counsel at both coasts to prosecute to the fullest limit of the law any one of you by trying to continue your rotten dealings of the past. We intend to exercise our rights at any cost and without a let-up. We will not confine ourselves to enforcing contracts with individuals, but we will punish, as much as the law permits, any crooked agent or corporation who tries to induce any artist to jump a contract with us.

You, and the exhibitors who support you, are directly to blame for the present frightful costs of making pictures. Drunk with easy money, you have tried to use the power of that money to corrupt or dissatisfy artist after artist who had none but honorable intentions and the best of good faith until you came along with your almost irresistible bribes.

You are not going to get away with it any longer. I am going to turn the spotlight on your activities every time those activities are crooked. I am going to frizzle you on the grill of redhot public opinion. I am going to use the one weapon that you are afraid of—The Truth!

This is my final warning. I will not write you any more polite private letters asking you to let our artists alone. As fast as I get the goods on you I will address you publicly and fight the matter out before the eyes of the exhibitors as well as before the courts.

I have tried working with you in National Associations and have found they are not worth a tinker's dam. I have tried every way I can think of to induce you to play the game with the cards on the table. But you don't know how. You used marked cards and you deal from the bottom of the deck!

Crooks of the world, which one of you will be first to take me on!

Lack of Story Weakness of Russell's Latest

William Russell in
"SHOD WITH FIRE"
Fox

DIRECTOR .....Emmett J. Flynn
AUTHOR .....Harold Titus
SCENARIO BY.....J. Anthony Roach
CAMERAMAN .....Not credited
AS A WHOLE.....Rather long drawn out with insufficient complications to justify feature length.
STORY.....Is built around a single situation which would have had more appeal if footage had been shortened.
DIRECTION.....Is accountable for fine western atmosphere but story prevented injection of much dramatic action.
PHOTOGRAPHY.....Some good scenes and others poor.
LIGHTINGS.....No special effects; some individual scenes show poor handling.
CAMERA WORK .....Good
STAR.....Registers as a clean, upright ranchman effectively enough.
SUPPORT ..... Average
EXTERIORS .....Good western stuff
INTERIORS ..... Appropriate
DETAIL.....Several turns of action towards the climax appear unreal.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Rancher's attempt to regenerate drink-sodden husband of girl he loves.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"Shod With Fire" is a western number, melodramatic in its entirety, that suffers through lack of sufficient complications to engage the interest throughout. In fact the story is built around a single situation, a strong one mayhap, but the superfluity of footage, prevents its strength from registering. As the action progresses and you discover they are sailing on the same tack all the way through, it proves to be a bit tiresome before the conclusion is finally reached.

Ann Lytton arrives in a town in Arizona just as Bruce Bayard, a ranchman, has brought a man into the hotel who is unconscious from drink. The man proves to be Ann's husband, Ned. Her discovery of this is, it seems the most dramatic moment in the entire picture.

Bruce takes Ned to his ranch in a contemplated effort to make him reform. But at every turn Ned goes for the bottle. When he has regained his strength Ann comes to him. He refuses to believe her statement that Bruce is a good man and insults her by saying he believes that they are lovers.

He prepares to start with her for his mine, in gaining which he had swindled the previous owner. Fearful of the consequences, as Bruce had warned Ann to keep him away from the mine, Ann sends a message to Bruce via his favorite mount, Abe. Bruce then gives chase. Arriving at the mine there is a lot of detailed action which quite spoils whatever dramatic effect intended, before Ned is finally shot by the former mine owner, his death removing all obstacles between Ann and Bruce.

There is considerable action centered about the horse, Abe, who delivers the message. This will likely appeal to most people. He acts the hero more than once and will doubtless receive a lot of comment.

William Russell makes a thoroughly likeable figure of Bruce and shows considerable expression. Helen Ferguson would have fared better had she acted with more animation, even though her role does call for a constantly depressed appearance. Others are Betty Schade, Robert Cain, George Stewart, Jack Connolly and Nelson McDowell.

Russell's Popularity May Help This Over Its Own Rough Spots

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

William Russell's popularity is built upon better stories than that offered in "Shod With Fire." This picture really presents nothing more nor less than an inadequate idea stretched into feature length and its consequent weakening because of the stretching is certainly obvious.

However, in view of Russell's fine performances in the past you may be able to get by with this by advertising it as "a romantic love song of the plains" as the producer suggests. Give it a good musical setting and speed up the running time as much as possible without making things look foolish and the results with the admirers of the star should not be so bad after all.

Tell them also that the picture was inspired by Bayard Taylor's old "Bedouin Love Song" and quote lines of this which will be found in the press sheet issued.

Fairly Satisfactory Picture Made From Strictly Conventional Material

Frank Mayo in
"BURNT WINGS"
Universal

DIRECTOR ..... Christy Cabanne
AUTHOR ..... Bayard Veiller
SCENARIO BY .....Percy Heath and Christy Cabanne.
CAMERAMAN ..... Alfred Gosden
AS A WHOLE.....Fairly satisfactory picture made from material of strictly conventional nature
STORY.....Maintains average degree of interest despite some very unreal characters.
DIRECTION ....Average
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally good
LIGHTINGS ....Some fine effects
CAMERA WORK .....Straight stuff
STAR.....Acts well in an unsympathetic role
SUPPORT.....Josephine Hill as sacrificing wife is forced; Betty Blythe in semi-vamp role steals sympathy.
EXTERIORS ..... Plain
INTERIORS ..... Suitable
DETAIL.....Some subtitles should be altered to gain better effect.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Wife sells herself to obtain money for sick husband who, recovered almost proves fickle.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,075 feet

The story and the treatment accorded it in the production are both conventional quantities with the case of "Burnt Wings" but the picture manages to get into the average class despite its stereotype mold and a pair of rather unreal characters. One reason for this is that it is brief and wastes small time about details, and although this treatment has also served to level the high-lights to a continuous state of sameness the action is never tiresomely prolonged.

The picture is an adaptation of Bayard Veiller's play, "The Primrose Path," and opens in a Paris studio where Ned Templeton, an artist, finds the going hard. When he suffers terribly from starvation his wife, Joan, goes into the streets and sells her body to obtain money for him.

Later Ned is seen installed in New York and successful. He is commissioned to paint the portrait of James Cartwright, a wealthy patron, whose acts are guided by the whims of his daughter, Helen. Helen takes a great liking to Ned and Cartwright schemes to separate him from his wife. In this he believes himself aided by the fact that he is the man whom Joan met in the Paris streets.

But his scheme fails. Ned hears him attempting to bribe Joan to leave him and threatening her with exposure of her past if she refuses. The result is that Ned casts his false friends aside and returns to the wife that made such a supreme sacrifice for him.

The picture brings out some good acting, notably on the part of Frank Mayo, the star, although the appeal he creates is rather short owing to the unsympathetic nature of the role. Betty Blythe, often seen in a lo and behold gown, makes a beautiful figure of Helen Cartwright and in fact, takes much of the sympathy that should go to the role of Joan which suffers considerably owing to the forced performance of Josephine Hill, who is pretty but by no means subtle or polished. Rudolph Christian gives a dignified and impressive performance in the rather impossible role of Cartwright.

Some of the subtitles could be changed to much better effect. When Ned tells his wife not to enter his studio because: "it would be fatal to my career," the very conventionality and "convenience" of the situation is bared to the bone whereas a more skilful use of words would in part cover it up. There are other subtitles of a similar kind.

Not Worth Making Any Big Fuss About

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Exhibitors of Universal pictures will find "Burnt Wings" below the best of the product issued by this company but good enough to fill a bill. It is not one that you can talk about with any great degree of confidence in your advertising for there is nothing exceptional about it in the way of either story or treatment.

The biggest advertising asset in connection with it is the name of the author, Bayard Veiller, who has the two plays, "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair" to his credit among others. Indicate that "Burnt Wings" is an adaptation of his play, "The Primrose Path." This should attract. But don't promise anything extraordinary.

SCENARIO BY .....Jack Cunningham
CAMERAMAN ..... Arthur L. Todd
AS A WHOLE.....Episodic and incoherent
STORY.....Fair material with very slight plot hinhered by weak continuity and injured by careless direction.
DIRECTION.....Gave little attention to presenting the story in an understandable way.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... All right
LIGHTINGS ..... Usually good
CAMERA WORK .....Ordinary
STAR.....Doesn't look the part of a lawyer
SUPPORT.....No one stands out conspicuously
EXTERIORS ..... Few used
INTERIORS ..... Satisfactory
DETAIL.....Biggest error in failure to properly identify characters.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Old story of the necklace.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

This is a case of fair story material being spoiled by either a bad continuity or lack of application on the part of the director. Surely something is vitally wrong somewhere for the five reels of "$30,000" have pretty well run their course before the spectator can make head or tail of the whole affair and by that time his interest has been sadly misplaced.

Incident upon incident is flashed upon the screen without the slightest degree of realism or hint as to what the whole thing is about. All that the audience knows is that the fuss is about a necklace but further than that they're kept wondering pretty much as to the rest of the action.

They start off by introducing the characters in a vague sort of fashion which probably accounts for the failure to understand what happens after the story gets started. Kerrigan is shown as a "poor but honest" lawyer who is greatly shocked by having $30,000 deposited in his care by Nancy Chase who is endeavoring to recover a necklace belonging to her uncle and which her cousin, Jack Rollins, has lost in a gambling game.

For some reason or other Warren hides the money back of the pictures on the wall in his office and finds it missing in the morning when Fritzi Brunette, as a go-between in the necklace deal, arrives with the jewel for which Warren is supposed to turn over the $30,000. Fritzi is innocent of anything crooked in the deal.

Fritzi's father is janitor of the building in which Warren has his office. While performing his duties the money falls from behind the pictures and the old man appropriates it. Warren goes to the gamblers' rendezvous to investigate and while there wins $30,000 at roulette which he gives to Fritzi in return for the necklace.

But it is not the real article so hero has to go back and fight for the genuine article which he returns to Rollins' uncle and is rewarded by the old man with a regular job as his lawyer. A prologue to the story informs that a sage of olden times is merely prophesizing the story and so in the end to satisfy the ladies of his harem he looks further into the crystal of the future and shows the wedding ceremony of Fritzi and Warren.

The Star's Name is Your Chief Asset

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Unless this production is revised to a much more satisfactory degree of coherence it would be advisable to hand your folks a synopsis of the story or they may not know what it's about. The fault lies mainly in a poorly arranged introduction which fails to properly link the characters with the action; that is, the audience will find it difficult to associate the players with the action.

Should you run "$30,000" play up the idea of the "poor but honest" lawyer who suddenly won himself a good position by recovering a famous necklace from a band of master gamblers. You could run the line:

"He lost $30,000 intrusted to his care but see how J. Warren Krrigan gets out of the difficulty in '$30,000' at the blank theater."

CAMERAMAN ..... Edward Gheller
AS A WHOLE ..... Murder mystery story considerably gruesome in nature but well portrayed STORY ..... Spends too much time building to main situation; interest drops because of this.
DIRECTION ..... Average
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Good
CAMERA WORK ..... Commendable
STAR ..... Appears to most attractive advantage in bobbed wig; registers emotional points nicely
SUPPORT ..... Very good throughout
EXTERIORS ..... Few
INTERIORS ..... Sumptuous for the most part; include several big settings.
DETAIL ..... Some minor points such as registering of heroine's jealousy done in commonplace manner.
CHARACTER OF STORY ..... Concerns planting of causes for murder and subsequent revelation of guilty man.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION ..... About 5,000 feet

"The Paliser Case" is a murder mystery which consumes much space leading up to the murder, in fact quite too much. Inasmuch as the title completely gives away the character of the production as soon as the villain is introduced it is a matter of sitting back and waiting for the scene in which he receives a sword thrust in the back. And this scene is a long while coming. After its occurrence the mystery is built up expertly, but no great degree of intensity is created owing to the fact that the clearing up of the situation follows so soon.

The picture has been given an extravagant production and reveals several big settings notably that of the charity bazaar background and the opera house scene. In some of the details of direction a commonplace hand shows. The registering of the heroine's jealousy is done rather poorly. And the manner in which the heroine discovers her mock marriage is not made as clear as it might be.

Cassy, daughter of an old crippled Portugese violinist, earns a scant living for her father and self by singing. She has met Lennox a fine young man who is engaged to Margaret, a society girl. Margaret's mother desires her to marry Monty Paliser, rich but dissipated. Through deceit she succeeds in breaking the engagement but Cassy, unaware of this, marries Monty in order to obtain money for her father.

It is not long afterwards that she discovers that she is the victim of a mock marriage ceremony. She tells her story to Lennox who, because of this and the further report that Paliser is to marry Margaret, vows vengeance. That night at the opera Paliser is stabbed in the back. Lennox is arrested. Cassy confesses that she committed the crime, tho' her old father is the real culprit. He had risen from his chain and made his way to the opera house, committed the crime and returned all unseen. He dies from a heart attack immeditely following his confession. Lennox and Cassy then plight their troth.

Pauline Frederick makes a striking figure, wearing a bobbed wig, and plays her emotional scenes with fine effect. An exceptional supporting cast includes Albert Roscoe, Warburton Gamble, James Neil, Alec Francis, Kate Lester and Hazel Brennan. Carrie Lee Ward also registers outstandingly in a comedy relief role.

Not Exceptional But You Can Get By With It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

As murder mystery pictures go "The Paliser Case" fails to offer anything greatly exceptional to the general run. However, the extravagant production awarded the picture and the acting of the star and the entire supporting cast will do much to successfully counterbalance this fault.

You will be able to get by with "The Paliser Case" in an average fashion if you don't go after it too enthusiastically in advertising. Catch lines and readers should be built around the mystery and by playing up this angle of the production you may be able to create a suspensive interest in the beginning of the picture that the production itself fails to produce.

CAMERAMAN .....C. Edgar Schoenbaum
AS A WHOLE.....Intended as polite farce but develops into broad burlesque which will hardly appeal to better class audiences.
STORY.....Has a number of farcical situations which propel the action at a fair clip.
DIRECTION.....Has fallen back on the burlesque for major portion of comedy.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Plain
CAMERA WORK .....Straight
STAR.....Has been seen to much better advantage than this; performance is monotonous, because of lack of shading.
SUPPORT.....Monte Banks bids too strenuously for laughs in burlesque role.
EXTERIORS.....Seascapes and Mexican
INTERIORS ..... Fulfill all story's demands
DETAIL ..... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY....Efforts of youg married man to escape domineering mother-in-law.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,431 feet

"Too Much Johnson" opens like a polite comedy as most all of Bryant Washburn's recent Lasky pictures have been, but before it has gotten very well along it finds its way into burlesque and burlesque of a very broad sort. But though it is broad in type, it is by no means so extensive in appeal. Lots of people, rightfully expecting at least an average polite comedy after seeing William Gillette's name attached to it as author, are going to be offended at the reckless intrusion of the burlesque thread which in time grows to dominate the action.

This burlesque is centered on the character of Dathis, a jealous wine merchant bent on discovering the man to whom his fickle wife has transferred her affections and of whom he knows nothing save for the fact that he has a wave in his hair. Monte Banks who handles this role overacts in typical burlesque style, but many of his antics will fail to register because they appear as such forced bids for comedy.

As the rest of the action is subordinated to these scenes the picture fails to measure up to Washburn's standard, as set in his previous pictures. And the star's work here is not up to his best. There are few if any shadings injected into the role and as a result it becomes monotonous before the end of the picture is reached.

The story gets under way after introducing Billings, his wife and Mrs. Patterson, his domineering mother-in-law. Billings has sold his yacht to a Mrs. Dathis but accepts her invitation to take a cruise but sails under the name of Johnson. He excuses himself to his wife and her mother saying he is going to look after oil investments in Mexico. Later he decides on another trip and gives the same excuse. Mrs. Patterson decides to go along with his wife.

This precipitates a grand mixup aboard the boat. Mr. Dathis is bound to kill the "Mr. Johnson" of his wife's acquaintance. A Scotchman is taking his daughter to Mexican oil lands to marry her to a Mr. Johnson. It develops that this Mr. Johnson has bought the lands from Billing's friend and thus his scheme of asking his friend to permit his posing as the operator is blown to bits.

The last sequence staged on the Mexican property of the irate Mr. Johnson is the best in the entire picture and winds the action up with a series of pretty good laughs. The burlesque is milder and the farce sits up and takes notice.

The star is supported by Lois Wilson, Adele Farrington, C. H. Geldart, Monte Blue, Elsa Lorimer, Gloria Hope and others.

Not Up to the Washburn Comedy Standard But May Get By

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This falls pretty short of Bryant Washburn's best comedies that he has made for Paramount-Artcraft but you will probably be able to get by with it with those who have come to like his work. A good reputation cannot be killed by one somewhat inferior picture and if your crowd has shown a leaning toward Washburn you can slip this in without fear providing you don't shout about it.

A good advertising name in addition to that of the star's is that of William Gillette, the author. Mention that he wrote "Secret Service." A good angle to reflect in the advertisements would be the relation of the fact that the whole foolish story was caused by an obtrusive mother-in-law. The mother-in-law jokes are old, but still useful.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Cumberland mountain youth comes out a hero on the Union side and wins over his Southern sweetheart.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,000 feet

Goldwyn couldn't have made a better selection for Jack Pickford than "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," for it gives him every opportunity that could be offered a juvenile and the star's realization of the part is indeed meritorious. He certainly makes an interesting figure as "Chad," a product of the Cumberland mountain wilds. Throughout the production his performance holds the spectator's interest with little or no variance.

As far as the production itself is concerned, every detail denotes extreme care and a genuine Southern atmosphere, made unusually real because of the accuracy of locations and settings. There are some very beautiful shots of real country in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," which are shown to particularly good advantage because of the lightings. The night scene in the quaint Kentucky village is splendid.

It does seem that the war sequence has been carried to an unnecessary length for the purpose of completing the romance between Chad and Margaret for that's about all that it does. Of course, it gives hero Jack a chance to prove that he is true blue even if he did join the Union Army.

Chad runs away from his mountain home after the death of his foster-parents and is taken in by the Turner family in the Valley of Kingdom Come where he works for his board and that of his dog. The schoolmaster in the Valley takes a keen interest in the lad because of his diligence and rewards him with a trip to Lexington. Chad bids good-bye to Melissa, secretly very fond of Chad, and the rest of his friends and starts on his vacation.

In Lexington he attracts the attention of Major Buford and when he misses the train for home, the Major invites him to his place. The Major has a sort of instinctive attachment for the lad and without much coaxing Chad agrees to stay but it isn't long before General Dean, a neighbor, objects to the presence of Chad because he knows nothing of his parents. In the end, after Chad returns from the war, the death-bed confession of an old mountaineer, clears his name and he wins the daughter of General Dean.

The supporting cast consists of a long and well known list of names, among them Pauline Starke, the little country girl Melissa, who died of a broken heart, Clara Horton, J. Park Jones, Clark Marshall, Edythe Chapman, James Neill, R. D. McLean, Aggie Herring, Dwight Crittenden, Nick Cogley and others.

Start Them Coming Your Way for This. They'll Like It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Jack Pickford is coming up stronger all the time and in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" he does some fine work in a part well suited to his personality. Admirers of the star are going to like him as Chad, the Cumberland mountain lad. He plays the part with genuine feeling and really gets the sympathy of his audience especially in moments where he is friendless except for his dog.

Your folks will like this one so go after outside business. If the star's producers continue to give him stories like "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" you can keep building up additional patronage when you show his name.

Catchlines could read: "A lad and a dog went down into the Valley of Kingdom Come. But go to the blank theater and see what happened after the lad went out of the Valley." Or, "See Jack Pickford as 'Chad' the Cumberland mountain youth in a vivid picturization of John Fox's 'The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come' at the blank theater."

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

"The Very Idea" isn't much of an idea as far as making a screen story is concerned. Eugenics may be all very well in books and even to be taken seriously by those who desire to take it that way, but when it comes to making a comedy based on this theory,—well, it isn't entertaining to say the least. However, it isn't intended to be taken seriously but even at that there isn't a genuine laugh in it.

Even forgiving the author for the basis upon which he has founded humor, "The Very Idea," like many previous farce and musical comedy adaptations, loses considerable of its appeal because of the missing dialogue. The title writer has endeavored to register some laughs but so many are required to keep the spectator informed, that they become tiresome and miss fire. Also look out for the scissored hand of the censor in more instances than one.

Gilbert and Edith Goodhue, after despairing of having a child of their own, decided to adopt one so they betake themselves to an orphanage where they begin their hunt. However, before they can make a selection from the assortment of youthful applicants for a home, Edith's bachelor uncle, a eugenist, interrupts the affair and advises that they allow him to secure their son.

Norah and Joe, maid and chauffeur respectively, in the home of the Goodhues, decide to get married so uncle in "anticipation" promptly plans to have Edith and Gilbert adopt Norah and Joe's baby, and in the meantime sends the proxy parents to Florida in order that they may become healthy parents for their adopted child.

In Florida, Gilbert, fearing Norah and Joe are going to disappoint him, gets himself into much hot water, including jail, in his effort to secure a baby "by hook or crook." When the young chauffeur does arrive Norah refuses to part with it but a smiling fade-out of Gilbert indicates renewed hopes for a son of his own

Taylor Holmes is practically the whole show. He is on the screen from start to finish and works hard as the "man without a son." Virginia Valli was a rather unconcerned young wife and others in the cast were Betty Ross Clarke, Jack Levering, Edward Martindale, Jean Robb, Edward Lester, Fay Marbe and George Cooper.

Use the Star's Name and Play Safe by Telling Them What It's About

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you have a cosmopolitan audience, the theme of "The Very Idea" will probably get by with them and be accepted for what humor they can get out of it. There will be some chuckles but very few real laughs and even if they are inclined to laugh out they will probably feel obliged to restrain themselves because of the more or less risque character of the subject.

The title will probably be familiar to many of your patrons because of the presentation of the play on Broadway last season with Ernest Truex. Play up the name of the star and use some catchlines. For instance, "Are you interested in eugenics? See how Edith and Gilbert finally secure a eugenic baby through the effort of a bachelor uncle." Or, "He wanted a son if he had to steal one. See Taylor Holmes in his son-hunting comedy, 'The Very Idea' at the blank theater."

Some Short Reels

"Torchy"

Yea, Bo! Want a good comedy—a good two-reeler—with the latest innovations in shimmying music captions? Then get to "Torchy."

This is a new one. The "Torchy" comedies featuring Johnny Hines are being produced by Charles C. Burr and if the rest of them come through as well as the first, shown this week at the Strand, it's a bet that they are going over big.

And the titles! Some titles. One or two of them are too long but otherwise they get across in great shape. Probably the captions really make this two-reeler a feature. Johnny Hines is good, of course, and the director has seen fit to let him alone so he plays his natural self. When he crosses himself after rubbing the countenance of a young Hebrew before he shoots crap, will get a giggle out of anybody.

And his shimmying feet. If there is a girl who loves to dance who comes to your house who just won't rave over Johnny's dancing, and the way shimmy music notes are shown on the screen—well then—she just isn't a dancer.

It is a good deal harder, so some say, to make a snappy two reel comedy than a feature. If so the Johnny Hines organization doesn't seem to be afraid of the job. They've certainly got a knock-out in their first one.

"The Charming Mrs. Chase," Pathe

"The Charming Mrs. Chase" is the initial two reel comedy produced by Mrs. Sidney Drew based on the "After Thirty" stories by Julian Street. Mrs. Drew has developed a human comedy very much in the same key as those she made with her late husband. Its laughs are never forced, they spring directly from humanisms that everyone accustomed to any kind of home life will recognize as realities. The plot is simple and merely relates of the manner in which a married man, a little bit tired of the routine of his existence, sought to provide himself with a thrill by taking another man's wife to luncheon. But the date proved inanely dull and so the husband goes home to his wife realizing that his future marital life is to be one of contentment minus thrilling episodes. The picture is invaluably enriched by the cleverly drawn characterization of John Cumberland as the husband. His work here serves to demonstrate that he is an artist.

"The Charming Mrs. Chase" should be on the bill of every high class and family theater. The thrills that the husband could not find are present in the shape of many, many laughs.

"Some Mind Reader," Dooley-Tyrad

Johnny Dooley in his second production for Tyrad proves that with properly selected, directed and produced vehicles, he should be successful in the films.

Taken as a whole, the offering will get over. Dooley has a winning personality, and in addition, Sophie Tucker and Gilda Grey, who are a pair of celebrities appear in the production, which gives it an additional pull at the box office. Unfortunately, the rather robust Sophie does not screen nearly as well as Miss Grey who shakes herself over the silver sheet with vigor.

In the early portion of the offering, there are too many titles. Many of these are funny and will draw laughs, but in a few places, it would be well to cut them. The story seelcted is a good one, but they did not always make the best of it, more action being necessary in places. But the picture does possess a sufficient number of good qualities to enable it to hold its own with the avearge audience.

"A Dream of Fair Women," M. W. Garsson

When the Motion Picture Magazine, Motion Picture Classic and Shadowland held their Fame and Fortune contest selecting about a score of the prettiest damsels and these who displayed the greatest amount of histrionic ability from 50,000 contestants, a two reel production was made, with the winners appearing. The offering, state-righted by M. W. Garsson, is strictly one for the picture fan. If exploited properly, that is, if played up to the fan in the proper manner it will undoubtedly prove of value at the box office.

Considering that the cast is almost entirely composed of amateurs, the work of the players is entirely satisfactory. The fault with the offering is that there is much more than enough material. But the story, the entire production, serve but one purpose, that of presenting the youthful maids upon the screen. And they are attractive, you can guarantee that.

In advertising appeal directly to the fans. Tell them of the contest, that numerous girls participated and that the actual winners are to appear in a two reel photoplay, adapted from Alfred Tennyson's poem, the title of which is the same as that given the picture. Mention names. Say that the judges were Mary Pickford, Cecil D. deMille, Maurice Tourneur, James Montgomery Flagg, Howard Chandler Christy and Olga Petrova. Then tell them who some of the lassies are. And accentuate the fact that it is a contest film; avoiding promises as to its matter.

The story concerns a young artist who is not faithful to the girl who loves and understands him. In a dream, after reading a poem of Tennyson's, he comes upon various women, representing grace, charm, coquetry, etc. It is love however, who understands him and furnishes him with inspiration, so that when he wakes he pursues his work with renewed vigor. In the end, he returns to the girl who adores and forgives him, because she understands him.

"An Island of Enchantment," Educational

Due to the popularity hand-colored scenics are enjoying at present there are more offerings of that sort on the market than usual. In this Educational Library De Luxe reel, some fault may be found with the manner in which the colors have been applied. There are several shots that are really beautiful, most of these being scenes showing the temples and pagodas of Japan, which has furnished the material for the subject. Some footage devoted to the manner in which small vessels similar to canoes shoot down rapids bears watching.

"Sailing and Fishing," Educational

Several exquisitely tinted shots of water scenes stand out in this Educational reel from its Library De Luxe, and add beauty to an otherwise satisfactory scenic production. A great part of it is devoted to the catching of a large species of fish of Palermo. This is of great interest. The camera work throughout is of high order. Worth while to get over with any audience.

"Log of the La Viajera," Educational

In screening this reel, Robert Bruce has departed from his usual haunts, and pursued the journey of a sailing vessel through Canadian waters. While there is some stuff in it that holds the eye, there is little of the natural beauty usually so profuse in his films and it is therefore not as appealing as some of his other stuff. The photography throughout is up to the mark, and there are many shots that are of interest. It is a creditable offering of its kind.

Short Reels

"Tick-Tock," Ford-Goldwyn

Several of the details of the making of clocks and watches are disclosed in this Ford industrial which is up to the standard. It is not especially valuable as entertainment matter but for those interested in this subject should prove of value. The manner in which it has been screened is satisfactory, considering that they had to go to a factory and shoot the stuff indoors without studio accommodations.

"The Adventures of Ruth," Pathe

Close conflict and rapid action is lacking in the tenth episode of this serial, called "The Forged Check". There is little in it to please the average serial fan, and the scheme of having the different keys handed the heroine, for her to follow out in each case the appended instructions, is becoming a bit tiresome.

Bray Pictograph, No. 424, Goldwyn

Considerable discussion has been aroused recently by several scientists who for a living are planning various ways of butting in on the residents of some other planet, which may or may not be very pleasant. In this Bray Pictograph, the first part is called "All Abroad for the Moon," a diagram study animated by Max Fleischer. It is one of the best bits of educational film ever made. The clearness with which each point is illustrated and the manner in which it has been screened is such as to hold the attention of those scientifically inclined as well as others. In addition, this has a Krazy Kat cartoon appended, directed by Vernon Stallings, and is quite clever, possessing several novel bits that will put it over. Every bit of the reel is entertaining, and the initial portion in addition possesses great educational value.

"Silverware," Ford-Goldwyn

Perhaps it is because making silverware is comparatively simple that this Ford educational offering hold attention so well, and perhaps it is because it is somewhat unusual. At any rate another very satisfactory industrial reel must be credited to the Ford organization. It shows skilled laborers fashioning the various common silverware utensils, and one or two of the processses are not very familiar, namely, some of the lathe work. One of the best of its kind produced by this firm in some time.

"One Dollar Down," National-Goldwyn

Oft has the comedy producer availed himself of the spectacle of men or women, or both, who have for some reason lost their outer raiment, chasing about where many meet. In this two reeler much of the punch is provided by this sort of stuff, but they have seen to it that the offering is kept more or less clean. In some places where the leading pair appears somewhat exposed, some of the scenes may be curtailed by censor boards, but the greater part of it should not cause any objection. There are numerous situations that are clever, the characters perform in fine fashion and the piece is superior to anything, Neal Burns has done for a long while.

The star is seen at the start as a clerk in a shoe store, where the floor-walker strives to win away from him, one of the girl employes. She agrees to accompany the latter to a ball and Burns also attends, buying on credit, a dress suit for the occasion. Unfortunately, he is discharged after getting into trouble with the floor-walker and the fellow who has sold Burn's the garment, on learning of his dismissal, plant to retrieve it. At the ball, Burns is caught and the suit removed. Incidentally, the girl's gown, which was supposed to have been delivered to the home of her employer, is also taken away, and some knock-about stuff results. In the end, Burn's cleverness is appreciated by the store owner, and he is made the manager. The girl is his, of course.

"A Pool of Peaches," Florida Film-Arrow

Present day picture audiences regard slap-stick comedies in a more or less nonchalent manner, unless they are based on stories that are out of the orrinary or possess business that is unusual. In this two reel "Sunbeam'" comedy, there is a lack of really worth-while material and the story is hardly commendable, yet the production generally has some mirth-provoking stuff. There are several attractive damsels who either sport gymnasium uniforms or single piece bathing apparel adding spice to the subject, and in several spots it picks up a trifle, but most of it will probably not get by very easily.

"The Lion Man," Universal

In the 15th and 16th episodes, respectively entitled "The Furnace of Fury," and "Relentless Renegades," rapidity of action, and the near unravelling of the mystery hold the offering up. A great deal of the action takes place in a moonshine still. It is, however, the scene of an exciting battle in which the hero almost overcomes a group of antagonists, but is of course lowered through a trap door when he is about to be returned the victor. Mexican bandits enter the story and the 16th episode ends in a way that will get them to come and see what occurs after that.

Short Reels

"The Phantom Butler," Republic

Living a sort of Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde life, a convicted and escaped forger is apprehended by Herbert Rawlinson, secret service man extraordinary, who supplements the haul with the round-up of another schemer. This is on of the William J. Flynn series of two-reelers in which Rawlinson plays the featured role. Although it does possess an element of suspense, it is at times rather obvious. Except for the lightings in some places, this is up to the mark technically, the players perform in acceptable style and the direction is satisfactory. As a whole, a reasonably good offering of its kind, that should go well where they like mystery, for although many of them will outguess it, they have kept this moving at a reasonably fast rate and it has much in it that will get over with a punch.

"Why Cooks Go Cuckoo," Gaiety Comedies

George Ovey is featured in a Gaiety comedy which is built about a rather thin theme, but has a few creditable situations which will put it over. The start finds the hero and his beloved employed respectively as cook and waitress in a restaurant. Ovey is informed that he has inherited a seminary, and accompanied by the lady of his heart, ventures towards his newly acquired property. In the school, there is a laughable situation, when he examines the girls with regard to their ability as to flirtation, and all goes well, until he finds that what he inherited was a cemetery, there being an error in the message. The finish finds the

"Quicksands," Arrow

For another of his Northwoods Dramas, Edgar Jones has selected a rather unusual theme. Beyond doubt, it could have been made into a longer production, and in keeping it down to two reels, he has made it necessary for the audience to take some things for granted. The offering is one that possesses an element of mystery, suspense and a generally wholesome atmosphere. Edgar Jones who plays the principal role appears to be a likeable fellow, and the rest of the cast is suitable. There is a good deal to be desired as far as the direction is concerned, however. In the scene in which Jones exposes the crooked gambling device by which the players are being fleeced of their lucre, the more or less calm manner in which the most recently cheated fellow takes it is surprising. At the finish the reason why Jones, who has been robbing the messenger of a timber company, taking only $5,000 each time is not made perfectly clear. His death in the quicksands in the end, leaving Demby and the girl happily united is a pathetic touch, especially so since Jones is the center of attraction throughout, making the two reeler an actual tragedy. The quicksand portion has been made very realistic, and the subject, as a whole merits booking.

"Should a Husband Tell?" Christie

Everything that a one reel comedy should have excepting the unusual, is to be found in this Christie production. It has been screened in fine fashion, directed well and the characters perform in a manner that will win favor. Unfortunately, the basic theme is one that has been used too frequently. The story concerns a youthful couple, whose little family is almost disrupted by the arrival of wifey's brother Of course hubby does not know he is her brother and is greatly astonished when he sees him kissing and embracing her The only unusual twist in this is, that hubby has a little surprise planned, the same being an auto which he intends to present to his wife. It results in his being mistaken for a taxi driver, and in his being placed in close proximity to the others and in some comedy when they attempt to eject him from his own home.

"Elmo, the Fearless," Universal

Chinese dives—villainous, sneaking yellow-skinned Mongolians—the fascination of the little-known Orient—these all please serial patrons. And so, in eposide 11, "The Temple of the Dragon," Elmo Lincoln with the fair young heroine, the wicked gang that would take from its just owner a valuable gold mine, all hie themselves to such a den, leaving an intricate dive in the city slums behind. For plausibility, this does not rank very high, in fact it does not rank at all. But it has action and is unusual. The finish, where the powerful Elmo Lincoln is tied to the image of the dragon, facing death because of a poisonous vapor it emits, will certainly hold attention.

The twelfth episode winds up with a crash in which an automobile and wagon on which the leading duo are perched come together. There have been several wrecks in this serial before and that will probably detract from the value of the scene, which has not screened very effectively. "Cashing Through," as this part of the production is called maintains just a fair average.

"License Applied for," Christie

Earl Rodney and 'Vera Steadman are featured in a Christie reel, in a story by Frank Roland Conklin. Thematically, this is quite acceptable and holds the spectator in suspense. The director has kept it moving at a satisfactory rate of speed, and the cast measures up to the desired standard. It concerns a young man, who is so certain that the girl who he loves will agree to marry him, that he secures a license before proposing. Invited to spend some time at her home, he tucks the license under his pillow, fearful lest the girl bolt when she discovers that he has secured it before gaining her consent. When the young lady's feminine cousin arrives, Rodney is asked to let her have his room, and the document still remains under his pillow. It becomes necessary for him to propose before the license is found, but he is interrupted every time he attempts to go through with it. Finally they do get at the certificate and the girl does become a bit peevish but all is well when she remarks that she sees no reason for not using it. A clever clean comedy.

"Dead Eye Jeff," Fox

Bud Fisher's caricature performers, Mutt and Jeff, join a circus in this reel and after some knock-about stuff, cleverly animated, and including much that is funny, they succeed in wrecking the entire establisment. Assistants to a lion tamer and sharpshooter are advertised for in the beginning, and the inseparables apply. Mutt amuses himself with the lion, while Jeff announces the freaks and then permits the pistol expert to shoot a pipe from his mouth. In that portion, most of the real laughs come, and the riot that results holds attention until the very finish.

"Her Private Husband," Fox

Fox's newest Sunshine comedy starts with a laugh in which Chester Conklin is reposing on the lap of a woman of plentiful proportions, sewing a patch on his trousers, while he plays solitaire on the floor. After that, Conklin, as the waiter and the cook, starts throwing a mass of dough about, and then comes the breaking up of crockery. No particular attention has been paid to continuity, for the next scene finds him before a cinema theater, where he flirts with a youthful, married, amateur actress. There is a laugh where Conklin tampers with the poster, but the stuff that results later lacks novelty, a great deal of it consisting of the shooting of revolvers and then a burlesque on a benefit performance. There is some good trick photography in the last few hundred feet, where Conklin bounces lightly about on balconies. Some of the gags in the early portion are funny.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Seattle—Just before the opening of "Beware of Strangers" at the Rex a two-column, six inch advertisement offering $1,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of Bertha Gibson appeared in the daily papers. The ad carried a picture and description of the girl, with the "$1,000 Reward" in large bold-face type at the top, and at the bottom in medium size type "See Beware of Strangers Saturday at the Rex Theater."

Creston, Iowa.—Manager Hanson of the Adams conducted a contest recently at a cost of $5 and several season passes to find out what stars appeal most to his patrons. In addition to discovering the best way to please the people, he aroused considerable interest and packed the house, incidentally getting much publicity locally. The contestants were to identify the photographs of the stars and name their productions. Hanson filled two lobby walls with photographs, 44 pictures on each one. He offered $5 and a season pass to the first person identifying each one, and such a pass to each person identifying them after that. It was also necessary to name a production in which each one had appeared. Newspaper discussion about pictures developed and a large number attempted to secure the passes.

Seattle—When "On With the Dance" was shown at the American, Bellingham. The ushers were dressed in Yama Yama costumes. Two days before the opening two of these Yama Yama girls went about the town distributing blotters which carried on the reverse side an advertisement of the show. As a prologue a girl dressed like Mae Murray in the play performs a dance similar to that in the picture.

A unique advertising idea appears opposite the theater in the arrangement of mirrors and prisms to form a reflector that catches the light of every passing automobile, as well as the street lights, glowing like a big fire and throwing a strong light on a sign "See the Masked Dancer at the American Theater."

W. S. Taylor, Famous Players exploitation representative for the Seattle territory, is personally supervising the publicity of this showing.

How It Happened

Ralph Ruffner, now with First National describes the circuitous and momentous course he had to travel before reaching New York as follows:

"Entered the motion picture exhibiting field from the railroad service via the piano stool route in the summer of 1909. Substituted for a player who was ill, and never returned to railroad work. Toll clicks wouldn't harmonize Assumed the management of a 240 seat house in Vancouver, Wash. in 1911; fought a trust for the town supremacy, winning out hands down only to have momentary ambitions to become a magnate wrecked—last lingering phrase of R. R. days—on the rocks of finance, via uncharted shoals of superior competition by a big, new theater which swept all possible revenue away via the free ticket route.

Managed the American Theater, Butte; Liberty Theater, Spokane; wrote advertising and publicity for Jenson and Von Herberg's Liberty and Columbia Theaters in Portland, and managed the Columbia.

"Was transferred to Butte as manager of the Rialto, succeeding C. S. Jenson, who moved to Portland.

"Habits — composer, ad writer, publicity. Features trained in every department of theater work from curb to back wall. Record, fifty-fifty between Columbia and Victor. Special decorations, use of midnight matinees for motion pictures as early as 1914 and 1915. Scientific accomplishments, the inauguration of audience singing without 'plants.'"

Independence

The Spirit of the Ince Luncheon—Comment on the Producers Situation

Independenec was the spirit dominating the luncheon held at the Claridge on Saturday at which Thomas H. Ince, J. Parker Read and Allan Dwan met a number of important film and newspaper folk.

Among those at the speakers' table besides the producers were Walter W. Irwin, F. B. Warren, George King of the Stoll organization of London and Louise Glaum. Thomas H. Ince in defining the ideas of the Associated Producers with regard to distribution made it clear that he expected an independent selling force with exchanges to look out for the product of himself and associates He did, however, leave a loop hole for a possible tie-in with one of the present distributing companies. He said, however, in this connection that he anticipated that this was rather unlikely.

Addresses were made by a number including several trade paper editors, Wm. Brandt and Louis Blumenthal as exhibitors. Both exhibitors urged the producers to distribute independently. Brandt, in behalf of the new New York state exhibitors organization pledged absolute loyalty of his associates to the new move of the producers.

It is understood that Ince will remain here about ten days. By this time it is expected that a deal will definitely be closed.

Coast Brevities

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Hollywood—Louis Stevens, formerly with Universal, has joined G. B. Samuelson, the British producer, as scenario chief.

Ormer Locklear, the aviator, is to be engaged by Lew Cody as advisory director in an air feature film.

King Vidor is about to begin work on "The Jack-Knife Man," by Ellis Parker Butler.

Hobart Bosworth has started production on his first vehicle for J. Parker Read, Jr. Irvin Willat is directing, with J. O. Taylor at the camera.

Bryant Washburn starts work this week on "The Sins of St. Anthony," a Saturday Evening Post story by Charles Collins. James Cruze directing.

Joseph Kilgour has been engaged to play an important role in support of Anita Stewart in "The Yellow Typhoon," now in course of production under Edward Jose's direction.

Lawrence Weingarten is to join L. J. Gasnier as publicity manager for Lew Cody and Mae Marsh, according to Rialto murmurings.

James Kirkwood, Barbara Castleton, Russell Simpson and Nigel Barry complete the cast for "The Branding Iron." This is a full fledged Reginald Barker production.

"The Temple of Dawn," by Miss I. A. R. Wylie, will be Bert Lytell's next Screen Classic picture following "Alias Jimmy Valentine," Metro officials announce. Arthur Zellner has begun the script.

Harry Hagenah, who has acted as co-director in the filming of 35 of his own scenarios, has joined the Louis B. Mayer staff and will be assistant director of the Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Co., Inc.

H. M. Walker, one of the best known sporting editors on the coast and formerly with the Los Angeles Examiner, has been engaged by the Rolin Film Company to write stories and titles for the Harold Lloyd comedies.

Matt Moore, who played beside Louise Glaum in "Sahara" also has the leading male role in the J. Parker Read, Jr. star's forthcoming release, "Love Madness." Moore was secured by Read through the courtesy of Marshall Neilan. Noah Beery was engaged to play the heavy.

Legislation to prevent screen stars cutting their own pictures is being advocated by the Motion Picture Directors' Asso., according to James Young. Young claims certain actors and actresses take the liberty to trim scenes after the director has inserted and passed them and, alleges the director, ruins the story and continuity of the film. He cites the Selznick picture featuring Elsie Janis as a "horrible example."

Bessie Love has started work at the Hollywood Studios on her first picture under her Callaghan contract, directed by Joseph de Grasse and Ida May Park. The story is from the novel of Charles Tenney Jackson, and is entitled "The Midlanders." Truman Vandyke and Jack Donovan are her leading men. A portion of the story will be made on the Mississippi River, and for this purpose the company expects to journey eastward within the month. Mr. Callaghan has in contemplation for Miss Love a picturization of Charles Dickens' "Old Curiosity Shop," with Bessie in the appealing character of Little Nell.

Byron Morgan, fiction writer, has just signed a long term contract as a member of the scenario staff at the West Coast studio of Famous Players. Morgan has been at work on the adaptation of "The Hippopotamus Parade," the first motor truck story in fiction.

Gale Henry will start work this week on the first of her new series of six two-reel comedies a year. An entire new cast and director has been engaged. The comedienne's first story, it is said, is not slapstick, but a straight human comedy.

Opera Singer Sues

Wants "The Forbidden Woman" Stopped—Seeks Court Action

One of the most novel film injunction suits yet filed has been brought in the Supreme Court by Henri Scott, well known American opera singer, who has been a member of the Metropolitan, Boston and Chicago opera companies is now in vaudeville, to restrain Equity Pictures from producing "The Forbidden Woman," the Clara Kimball Young picture which is at the Capitol this week.

Scott sues in behalf of himself and all other operatic performers on the ground that the film presents a false picture of the life of an operatic star, and will not only cause operatic stars to quit their profession and will discourage young singers from going into opera, but will cause persons who see the film to become disgusted with opera and those presenting it.

The plaintiff objects because the woman operatic star in the film receives the composer of the opera in her bedroom when she is in negligee, is accused of the murder of a lover who committed suicide, and otherwise conducts herself in a way that Scott says is not true to life behind the operatic scenes. He says that the name, "Diana de Angelis," chosen for the star of the film, "could with propriety be supplied to a certain well known European operatic star."

Richard C. Travers has been engaged to play the leading male role in "Determination" which U. S. Photoplay will produce. The picture has been frequently advertised as a $500,000 production.

Chicago May Close

Theaters Threaten Shut-Down Unless Operators Give In

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Chicago—This city, according to a statement made by Sam Atkinson, business manager of the Allied Amusements Ass'n, composed of practically all of the amusement interests in this city will shut down its motion picture theaters on Feb. 29 unless the Moving Picture Operators' Union meets the demands of the association.

The ultimatum came as a result of a meeting of the exhibitors and the exchange heads on Monday, and as a result of the forcing of a number of operators on each of the theater owners at $50 weekly, so the association claims.

The theaters in Cook County will shut down after the weeks' notice forwarded to the operators expires. The exchanges are backing the exhibitors to the hilt and state that no films will be circulated. Any exchange caught furnishing film contrary to this decision, it is stated, will be put out of business.

The I. A. T. S. E. which is the national organization embracing the operators' union refused to comment on the situation yesterday further than to say that the trouble was a local affair An effort to ascertain whether the organization would back the Chicago union as a unit was not successful.

Injunction Denied

Justice Platzek in the Supreme Court yesterday denied the application for an injunction brought by George Loane Tucker against Famous Players-Lasky and the Mayflower Photoplay Corp.

In rendering his decision, Judge Platzek said in part:

"The motion for an injunction is denied. On the papers before me I am unable to hold that the provisions of paragraph 10 of the distributing contract were made for the benefit of the plaintiff or that they are enforceable by him, especially in view of the provisions of the contract of May 28, 1919 by which all previous contracts between the plaintiff and the Mayflower Corp. were cancelled except as to payments required to be made on account of 'The Miracle Man.'

"In respect to the various other matters sought to be made the subject of an injunctive relief, the rights of the plaintiff are too much in doubt to justify any interference by the Court pending a trial of the issues."

"Are you going to let that child take the bottle away from you?" he sneered—Anita Stewart in the Louis B. Mayer-made production, "The Fighting Shepherdess," a First National attraction.—Advt.

Edward Bowes and Messmore Kendall Interested in Production

Edward Bowes and Messmore Kendall of the Capitol Theater are interested in the Vivian Martin Productions, the first of which will be directed by John W. Noble.

The fact that they are interested in this production has naturally led to the question of whether or not the financial interests behind the Capitol intend to go further into production. It is understood that if the first Martin production proves successful that Bowes and Kendall may go heavily into production generally, but that they are feeling their way with the Martin feature.

Hart Suit Under Way

Star Suing Ince for Division of $500,000—Claims Half of Sum

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—The suit of William S. Hart, against Thomas H. Ince involving the distribution of $500,000 went to trial yesterday in the Superior Court here.

The first gun fired in the fight was when Wetherhorn, Hoyt and Jones attorney's for Hart argued a demurrer to Ince' cross complaint before Judge Jackson.

It is claimed by Hart that the profits accrued from certain pictures in which he starred for two years was $1,500,000. The suit dates back several years when it is alleged that Ince and Hart, as friends in 1917 decided to leave the N. Y. M. P. Co. and produce with Hart as star.

It is alleged they arranged at the time for a division of the profits. Ince, it is claimed, then made a contract with Artcraft and that the profits accrued from July, 1917 to July, 1919 were about $1,500,000 of which it is alleged $1,000,000 has been distributed. Hart claims that the remainder, $500,000 should be divided on an equal basis while Ince claims more than half.

In the cross complaint, Ince seeks to set out a reform contract on the ground of a mutual mistake of fact. He is represented by Ingle Carpenter.

The suit is arousing considerable interest because it is believed considerable information relative to profits made in pictures will be divulged as the action progresses.

Connick on Coast

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—H. D. H. Connick, chairman of the Finance Committee, of Famous Players-Lasky, is here looking over studio conditions.

Shortly after Mr. Connick assumed his duties as chairman of the Finance Committee, there were a number of changes made in the New York organization of Famous Players. The fact that he has reached the coast as noted briefly several days ago, has lead to the reports circulating that it would not be surprising if important and material changes were made in the studio operations of Famous Players.

Indianapolis—Twenty of the leading exhibitors of Indiana have been meeting behind locked doors "Somewhere in Indiana." Fifty-first run houses are controlled by the consulting ones. Idea of the confabs is said to be a state organization that will assume releasing franchise of one of the new co-operative organizations, possibly Associated Exhibitors, Inc., and will also aid its membership in the acquirement of realty and the contruction of new theaters in growing neighborhoods. Rembusch and Olson are mentioned as leaders in the movement. Date of bursting forth in print about four to six weeks off.

Indianapolis—It is buzzed about that the Loew house which commences building this spring may not be "picture competition" at all. Going up where there are so many picture theaters, it had owners of latter worried; but the latest news is that this very abundance of straight picture houses has decided the Loew interests to a vaudeville-film policy in the new one. This report is made logical by the Famous controlled theater to go up across the way from Loew's, and which will undoubtedly be straight pictures. Famous, the reports have it, do not contemplate building this year at all, but in 1921. This may or may not be true but the whole town has had the dope and speak of Loew's as the only new theater for 1920.

Indianapolis—New York film crapshooters, take notice. A Manhattanite wishes to see Frank Rembusch and called up the Ohio Theater. He was told Rembusch could be found at his home in Shelbyville. He asked for the telephone number, and was informed: "Shelbyville Seven Eleven."

P. S. Frank DOESN'T roll 'em!

Indianapolis—Whirling dervishes formed a part of a photoplay entertainment for the first time when S. Barrett McCormick of the Circle brought the Ben Ali troupe down from Chicago for "The Temple of Diversion," which he is staking in conjunction with "River's End," the Neilan picture which opened Sunday. The Circle stage has now contained every kind of novelty on the face of the globe except a squad of Uhlans, and who knows now the war is over McCormick may import a party.

When he recovers he expects to close the deal. He will produce special features pictures only with the assistance of two directors.

No matter what sympathies,—apathies,—or antipathies an exhibitor may have,—he is sure to like and want RITCHEY posters.

Regarding Tucker

M. L. Malevinsky, His Attorney Says Court Decision Is a "Victory for Tucker"

After carefully reading the decision made by Justice Platzek in the Supreme Court in the George Loane Tucker suit against Mayflower and Famous Players-Lasky for alleged breach of contract, M. L. Malevinsky, of O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll, Mr. Tucker's attorneys issued the following statement yesterday:—

"Mr. Tucker brought a bill for an injunction and prayed for a temporary injunction among other things, restraining Mayflower Photoplay Corp. and Famous Players-Lasky Corp. from exploiting 'The Miracle Man' contrary to paragraph tenth of the distribution contract, and restraining the defendants from interfering with Mr. Tucker securing other directorial engagements.

"The defendant, Mayflower Photoplay Corp. counterclaimed against Mr. Tucker and sought a preliminary injunction restraining Mr. Tucker from rendering his services other than to and for the Mayflower Photoplay Corp. or in producing for himself or others motion pictures until he had completed five motion pictures for defendants.

"Mr. Justice Platzek in his decision denies a temporary injunction to both the plaintiff and the defendant and holds that he will not interfere between the parties pending a final trial of the issues. The practical effect of Mr. Justice Platzek's decision is to give Mr. Tucker freedom of action so that he may produce motion pictures as he sees fit pending the final trial of the action between Mr. Tucker on the one hand and Mayflower Photoplay Corp and Famous Players-Lasky Corp. on the other.

"The decision is a victory for Mr. Tucker."

Chicago Talks of Compromise

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Chicago—Both the Allied Amusement Association and the Moving Picture Operators' Union have appealed to the State Attorney for settlement of the battle now waging between the theater owners and the operators.

The association continues making charges of blackmail and extortion against the union.

"No more to drink tonight," she pleaded, but Jezebel of Sand Coulee snatched the glass from her daughter's hand—Anita Stewart in "The Fighting Shepherdess," a First National Louis B. Mayer-made production.—Advt.

Two New Directors

Election of two new directors for First National, and adoption of plans recommended by the Exhibitors' Defense Committee as essential measures for the protection of independent theater owners are the important features of a joint session of First National and of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., held at the Astor, the first three days of this week.

Samuel Katz, of Balaban & Katz, who recently purchased the half interest in the franchise for Illinois, was elected a director to succeed Aaron J. Jones.

E. B. Johnson, general manager of Turner and Dahnken, owners of the franchise in Northern California and Nevada, was elected a director to succeed T. L. Tally of Los Angeles who recently disposed of his franchise to Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser.

Exchange Men Meet

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Chicago—Twenty of the twenty-six exchanges distributing the product of the Capital Film are in Chicago to attend a five day session at which it is expected a number of important plans will be evolved.

At the first session a Ways and Means Committee composed of the following was appointed: Lewis, Texas; Cuyler, Colorado; Farrell, New England; Kahn, Kansas City; Pearce, New Orleans; Cropper, Chicago and Chalkin of California. A committee designated as the territorial rights and percentages committee was named, composed of Warner, Cleveland; Coffey, Washington; Hite, Cincinnati and Joe Brandt, special advisor.

It is understood here that the idea back of the convention is to develop plans whereby the short reel market can be controlled.

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Des Moines, Ia.—The Evening Tribune says in part:—

"Announcement of the $1,000,000 merger which has been previously rumored, was officially made to-day.

"A. H. Blank, president of the new corporation makes the announcement.

"Mr. Blank's three theaters, the Des Moines, Palace and Garden and Mr. Abe Frankel's three theaters, the Rialto, Casino and Majestic are the houses included in the merger.

"A. H. Blank will be president of the new firm and will own a controlling share of the stock. Abe Frankel will be vice-president and general manager. Other officers have not been named.

"The consolidation is a defensive move to combat Wall St. interests.

"The pictures for all six houses will be bought through one office doing away with competitive bidding."

A short time ago Mr. Blank denied the amalgamation now reported and later sent this office a telegram in which he stated that he was not selling out to Goldwyn.

"April Folly," with Marion Davies, will be the feature attraction at the Capitol Theater, New York, the week of March 28th.

Following the Capitol showing it will appear at several New York and Brooklyn theaters.

An equal or greater success than Miss Davies' former Cosmopolitan Production, "The Cinema Murder," which broke all records at the Rialto, is expected for "April Folly."

This picture offers unusual angles for exploitation. Miss Davies' own vivacious personality and charm, as well as many opportunities for dramatic character portrayal have never been given a wider opportunity than in "April Folly."

Sheriff Gets Action

When Deputy Sheriff Christopher Plunkett visited the Fox studios yesterday to serve papers on William Fox in a suit brought against him regarding the operation of a theater in Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, he declares he was so roughly treated by employees of the Fox organization that he visited the U. S. District Court yesterday in an effort to secure summonses against William Fox and an employee for contempt of court, so court officials stated yesterday afternoon.

Plunkett states he was received in a manner that made it necessary for him to produce his gun to serve proper papers before departing.

Arthur James, of the Fox executive staff said late yesterday afternoon he knew nothing about it.

Frohman Stock Plan

Calls for 5,000 Stockholders Among Picture Fans—Expect to Raise $1,000,000

The Frohman Amusement Corp. has under way a campaign to secure 5,000 picture fans throughout the country as stockholders. It is also expected that $1,000,000 capital for further financing of the corporation will result.

In discussing the campaign, the first advertisement relative to which appeared in a number of newspapers last week Wm. L. Sherrill, president of the corporation said yesterday that the idea was very simple.

"We are going direct to the public to sell stock," he said, "rather than securing capital from Wall Street and paying the usual bonus for underwriting. But far beyond raising a million from stock subscriptions is having 5,000 people of this country becoming individually boosters of our pictures. That's the big idea."

Mr. Sherrill added that although the campaign has just started that so far over 2,000 inquiries have been received.

So that the advertising campaign of Frohman Amusement would be differentiated from fly-by-night concerns in the industry selling stock the full plan of the campaign was sent to newspaper publishers prior

Chicago Deadlocked

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Chicago—Apparently reports of compromises between the Allied Amusement Association and the Moving Picture Operators' Union were premature.

The union is willing to have a committee composed of its president, business manager and one member from the ranks meet any six exhibitors but refuses to have in that committee the president, or business manager of the association. The association has lined up solidly behind its officers and will not arbitrate on the basis set forth by the union.

The deadlock now threatens to extend to the stage hands and electricians and all other theaters in Chicago may be shut down.

McGuire Here

George McGuire, head of Metro's cutting department on the coast is in New York to assume a post close to Maxwell Karger at the 61st studios.

She thrilled to his words of love, and wondered how this man, so dominant among his fellows, could be so gentle—Mildred Harris Chaplin in "The Inferior Sex," her initial Louis B. Mayer-made picture for First National.—Advt.

Plans Under Way, Says Powers—Extensive Foreign Projects Being Contemplated

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Los Angeles—P. A. Powers in an interview stated that Universal is invading the foreign field and would have a London studio, also that it would send companies to Italy and the Orient.

This was necessary, he declared, in order to combat the inrush of foreign pictures especially Italian and French ones which are sure to compete with American pictures on the latter's own ground.

Powers declared that from his observation and experience it appeared to him that local civic bodies were not lending as much co-operation as they should to picture companies considering the amount of money which the organizations are pouring into the community.

He also declared the picture theater buying game into which so many companies are rushing at present is only a phase of the business, a fad for the moment that will pass.

Dwan Leaves for Los Angeles

Allan Dwan left for California yesterday. Mark Larkin, his press representative will remain in town for a week or so "to meet the boys."

to the first advertisement appearing. The campaign is being conducted in newspapers in Boston, Pittbsurg, Washington, Dallas and Ft. Worth, Texas, Kansas City and Minneapolis. It is planned to extend this later so that one large city in every state in the union carries the advertising.

Prospective purchasers of stock are allowed to buy 20 $10 shares of 8 per cent preferred, redeemable at $10.50, with which they are given 4 shares of the common. There are 100,000 shares of the preferred stock which is cumulative, and 60,000 shares of the common.

The first copy appearing, running full column length, reads:

Tidings of Joy and Profit
(for movie patrons)

But in order to actually get any of the joy and profit it will be necessary for you to ANSWER this Announcement promptly by sending your name and address plainly written on a postcard. And don't let anybody, or any skeptical mood of your own fool you out of sending that postcard TODAY, for this is a very special and limited opportunity, which ends almost as soon as it starts.

As soon as we have received your name and address we will send you a certain BOOK without cost to you—together with a list of Frohman Productions and portraits of Frohman Stars.

This Book, which explains
THE FROHMAN PLAN
for sharing some of the vast profits of the Screen with those who attend motion picture theaters, is likely to turn out to be the most interesting book you have ever read.

Maybe you will read it under the light of your reading lamp in the quiet of your own home, or maybe you will read it somewhere else; but wherever you read it, be sure that you read it ALL. Skip no paragprah. Overlook no fact. Be prepared for action.

Possibly the last thing that would occur to you is the idea of your being personally interested in the Motion Picture business and making money out of it. But life is a strange and changeful thing, and the really progressive man or woman is always getting new gleams and facing new opportunities. So we needn't be surprised at most anything that happens need we?

Your name and address, promptly mailed, will bring you the Book which contains the story of your immediate personal opportunity in connection with the business of producing and selling Motion Pictures—one of the greatest, one of the most useful, one of the most profitable enterprises in the world.

And you may live right where you live now, keep at your own task, and still secure for yourself the benefits of this profitable and satisfying connection.

Address: Frohman Amusement Corporation, 311 Times Building, New York.

The second advertisement reads:

Tom, Dick and Harry
(also Theresa, Doris and Harriet) are invited to answer, within 24 hours, this Announcement of the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

The only conditions are

First: You must be interested in the movies and occasionally attend some motion picture theater:

Second: You must be a person of thrift, making or earning some money on your own account and eager to make more.

If these two things are true of you, just write your name and address on a postcard or lettersheet and shoot it into the mail.

We will then send you a certain BOOK which tells you all about for sharing motion picture profits with the people who pay to see the pictures—including yourself.

Fancy watching a play on the screen and knowing positively that some of the box office money is sure to find its way into YOUR POCKET!

We have worked out the Frohman Plan very carefully and are now ready to see it, together with a list of Frohman Productions and 24 Portraits of Frohman Stars, all without cost or obligation on your part.

The only thing you need to be sure about just now is the PROMPT SENDING of your name and address.

We will take care of everything else, and are certain you will be mighty glad you ever read and answered this Announcement.

Address: Frohman Amusement Corporation, 310 Times Building, New York.

Chicago Situation Amicably Adjusted—Theaters Will Not Close

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Chicago—The differences between the Allied Amusement Association and the Moving Picture Operators' Union which threatened to play havoc with business here were settled yesterday as a result of a conference between six representatives of the Association and six of the union.

It was decided that the big theaters such as the Riviera, Central Park, Crystal, Palace, Howard Broadway Strand and Pantheon are to have three operators: one for matinees and two for evenings.

There are to be seven de luxe shows a week in the evenings with two matinees for Saturday and two for Sunday. When additional de luxe performances are desired on the part of the theaters, there are to be additional operators.

When grievances of any nature occur in the future, the difficulty is to be settled by a joint committee of exhibitors and operators.

In the Courts

The Attractions Distributing Corp. has filed an answer in the Supreme Court to the suit of Frederick Burlingham. The answer admits receiving $16,000 from the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. but denies other allegations.

It alleges that on Dec. 4 last in consideration of $5,000 and the release of advances to the plaintiff which he had agreed to pay, the plaintiff was to deliver to the defendant a negative of "Down Upon the Swanee River." The defendant has delivered positive prints to the Inter-ocean Film Corp. and that defendant claims it is thereby released from the contract sued on by the plaintiff.

A jury in the Supreme Court returned a verdict for $7,500 against the Mirror Films, Clifford B. Harmon, Harry Lambert, the Lambert Films and Andre de Segurola in the suit of Benjamin R. Gornto to recover $166,000 damages because the defendant broke a contract made with him by which he was to sell stock in the Lambert Films. He said he had orders for all the stock alloted to him when Lambert and de Segurola got Harmon interested and they gave up the Lambert concern and organized the Mirror Films.

"Let's Get Together"

Frank Rembusch is circularizing the New York State exhibitors on the growth of a national organization of exhibtiors.

In view of the rather strained relations between the M. P. Exhibitors of America, Inc. and the New York State Exhibitors' League the following paragraph from Rembusch's circular will perhaps cause some merriment:

"New York State Exhibitors meet in Utica, March 9th and 10th. Pack your grip and go. Let business go for a day and do the big thing. Let us all get together. Send your dues to-day to M. P. Exhibitors of America, Inc."

Urges More Exporting

New Angle on Foreign Situation Given By Inter-Ocean's Stand

A new angle on the foreign situation was brought to light yesterday when an announcement issued by Inter-Ocean Film Corp. one of the pioneers in the field stated that the company intended exporting more film than ever.

This stand is rather interesting in view of the oft-repeated assertions from other exporters that the rate of exchange prohibited the carrying on of foreign trade.

"At a time," says Inter-Ocean, "which has been termed 'the most critical period in the history of the motion picture export business,' when external conditions are particularly unsettled, Inter-Ocean feels the urgent need for the transaction of a greater volume of export business now than ever before.

"The present chaotic condition of the foreign film market, is fully justified. Not alone have motion pictures been affected, but thorough investigation reveals that many of the nation's other important industries have suffered in direct ratio.

"Inter-Ocean maintains the belief that a period of inactivity in the export branch of the business, would lead to fatal consequences. It cannot see its way clear to endorse the policy of 'watchful waiting' in the present crisis, but it heartily recommends the transportation of greater quantities of films and accessory products to foreign territories. It feels that such action will stimulate motion picture export trade in the future.

"At present the American product's supremacy in the export field is unquestioned. If we are to maintain this supremacy, the logical thing to do is to export, export and export. We cannot place too much emphasis on this point."

Jones in Pittsburgh

Pitsburgh—Fordyce Jones, representing the English syndicate that is constructing four houses in London, was in this city for two days inspecting the Davis-Harris houses and conferring with Harry Davis.

It is believed that Jones extended Davis an invitation to come across the pond this fall and lend his ideas to the opening of the new London houses. While generally unknown to the film industry, Harry Davis is British-born, coming to this side as a youth.

Jones spent two weeks in New York inspecting the Broadway houses on the construction side, also the manner of putting on their shows, Bert Adler being his host in that city.

Americanization

Secretary of the Interior Lane has sent a letter to producers relative to the Americanization plan which deals with the campaign planned. Briefly, says the letter, the plan of the campaign is to promote the production of 52 one reel or two reel subjects —preferably one reel subjects —founded on original Americanism themes, similar to the splendid Liberty Loan stories which have been so widely praised. The films will be released at the rate of one each week for a period of a year to the number of one hundred copies of each. The bigness of the plan, therefore, immediately suggests itself as 2,600 prints will be in circulation within six months.

Under the plans of the committee no profit for the production or distribution of the pictures is to be taken. It is agreed that the producer may select such distributing channels for his product as he desires, but the division of rental is to be 50 per cent. to the producer, to cover the cost of production; 35 per cent. to the distributor, and 15 per cent. to the general expense fund of the motion picture committee on Americanism.

Lane After Pettijohn

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Washington—It is learned here that Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane has tendered the secretaryship of the Americanization Committee to Charles C. Pettijohn of New York. This was the post held by the late Major Raymond W. Pullman.

Mr. Lane made public yesterday the first responses to his telegrams of last week enlisting the aid of prominent picture folks in the campaign.

Mr. Lane sent out telegrams last week to every important star, producer and distributor asking their aid in the campaign.

Responses have been received from Paul Brunet, W. W. Hodkinson who said two pictures had already been started; Beulah Livingstone, for Norma and Constance Talmadge; Wallace Irwin, George Fitzmaurice, Milton Sills, Lionel Barrymore, B. S. Moss, George Fawcett, Chester Conklin, Lew Cody and Irene Castle.

These are the names of the first to answer Mr. Lane's wires. Additional lists will be made public shortly.

Charles C. Pettijohn when seen at the Select offices yesterday refused to either confirm or deny that he had been offered the post.

11 Theaters for Moore

Special Feature Presentations May Be Brought Into New York Later

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Washington—When Tom North really has his spurs on he will have 11 houses under his management for Tom Moore if the Moore plans are carried out. Moore will have 11 houses here. One of the big plans behind the Moore expansion is the development of special presentations, such as he has made in the past. He is working on a big special presentation for "In Old Kentucky" in which he will have five treadmills showing the big race scene.

It is understood that after the special presentations are made in the Moore houses that the settings, etc., will be taken into New York for Broadway showings.

In one of the new Moore houses there will be no proscenium arch, the setting being arranged with each picture to cover this.

Applicants for Franchises Please Notice

The delay in replying to your letters of inquiry has been due to the magnitude of the task of our statistical staff at present engaged on pro-rating the Franchise Units to be allocated to each and all territories. In order that the percentages allocated to each territory be absolutely accurate and fair to all it is necessary to complete the statistical division of the entire United States and Canada before any one theatre is given an estimate as to its Franchise percentage.

The gigantic task is now nearing completion and we can assure the very great number of exhibitors who are anxiously awaiting a reply by mail or in person by a First National representative that we will give their applications consideration at the earliest possible moment.

The widespread interest in our new Franchise proposition is very gratifying. It is the strongest kind of indication of the realization by exhibitors generally of the benefits that it is certain to bring to those fortunate ones who secure a First National Franchise and the many advantages that will accrue.

Mark Twain Lives Again on the Screen; a Picture With a Wide Appeal

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN"
Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... William D. Taylor
AUTHOR ..... Mark Twain
SCENARIO BY .....Julia Crawford Ivers
CAMERAMAN ..... Frank E. Garbutt
AS A WHOLE.....Delightful picturization of characters and episodes that ninety-nine out of a hundred know.
STORY .....Sure-fire in its humorous appeal
DIRECTION.....Has brought out the real spirit of the book in every scene.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Fine
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
LEADING PLAYER.....Lewis Sargeant a wonderful find for the title role.
SUPPORT.....Many fine types
EXTERIORS.....Lot of Mississippi River scenes mellow with old atmosphere.
INTERIORS ..... Highly appropriate
DETAIL.....Correct from big to little things
CHARACTER OF STORY....Adventures of Huck Finn.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....7,186 feet

Mark Twain on the screen is as universally appealing as Mark Twain on the printed page, for here was an author that wrote in a language that all who read appreciated, thrilled, chuckled, laughed and understood. So a Mark Twain work on the screen is bound to appeal in all directions provided it is transferred with due care and regard for the atmosphere surrounding the original work.

And this task has been successfully accomplished by Director Taylor and his scenario writer, Julia Crawford Ivers, with respect to "Huckleberry Finn" and in the success of their efforts is written also the tremendous success that the picture is bound to achieve.

Its appeal is bounded by no limits. "Huckleberry Finn" is a picture for children, women and men of all ages, creeds and races. Its various episodes are for ever a-tingle with the quaint humor and characterization that were Mark Twain's genius. Huck Finn in the bondage of pampering and nagging old maids, Huck Finn maltreated by a drunken father, Huck Finn a refugee down the Mississippi River, away from it all, and Huck Finn in the midst of various humanly appealing funny adventures, is a constant joy.

If any episodes in the work here offered stand out they are those showing Huck and the two fakirs, the "Duke" and the "King." The rare humor which the scenes between them build up accumulating in the riot at the final performance of the "Royal Nonesuch" when the audience comes armed with sundry missiles from bad eggs to dead cats, is positively infectious. But then, too, all the many scenes connected with the vagabond existence that Huck Finn leads on the Mississippi raft are fairly loaded to the sprocket-holes with comedy as rare as it is human. Suffice it that all the episodes hang together remarkably well and that, after it is all done, they leave you in a state of admiration for those responsible for the perpetration of this Mark Twain work in new form.

Lewis Sargeant was a happy choice for the title role for he is the very embodiment of the familiar character, while his performance is entirely free from harmful swagger. A long list of names is included in the supporting cast, among which Frank Lanning, Orral Humphrey, Tom D. Bates, Gordon Griffith (in the role of Tom Sawyer), Katherine Griffith and Martha Mattox are outstanding.

Let Loose on This in All Directions and Prepare For a Clean-up

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

You certainly can't well afford to miss playing "Huckleberry Finn" if you have your box office and the entertainment appetite of your patrons ever in mind. There is no doubt in the world but that it is going to register and register big with all audiences, intellectual, average, commonplace or lowbrow. So it's up to you to let loose with your advertising in every conceivable direction and prepare for a cleanup after it's been written across your books.

For that matter the picture would make money, and more than the average feature, just on the display of its name alone over your theater entrance. It would advertise itself broadcast after one performance. But when a picture comes along such as this that gives you the opportunities to comb all the unusual publicity channels, such as special exhibitions for literary societies and children, special articles regarding the accuracy of the production, endorsements from clubs and leading citizens, you should go to it with a will and the results will quite likely justify an extended booking.

CAMERAMAN ..... William Fildew
AS A WHOLE.....A great big production with a thrilling story that will spread like wild fire.

DIRECTION.....Shows infinite care in handling of all details as well as dramatic values.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very unusual
LIGHTINGS.....Some excellent effects
CAMERA WORK....Includes very effective angles
STAR.....Title role is admirably fitted to her and she makes a tempestuously vivacious and very appealing heroine.

CHARACTER OF STORY.....Strife of American hero and Turkish villain over heroine.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 6,400 feet

The fellows up at Universal have been saying an awful lot of fine things about "The Virgin of Stamboul" for the last couple of months. This is usually a pretty dangerous pastime for if a picture is merely good after so much word-of-mouth advance work, it leaves you unsatisfied. But, by George, this time the picture backs 'em all up and goes 'em a few superlatives better on its own. As a money-maker it's there with all that is necessary.

In the first place H. H. Van Loan wrote a story that afforded many spectacular opportunities as well as supplying just the sort of a role that fits Priscilla Dean. He has taken sure-fire ingredients, just romance, a lot of adventure stuff and plenty of villainy and he has mixed them with the skill of the authors of best sellers. The story surely does hold your interest all the way and winds up with one of those fight-to-the-death-to-the-rescue climaxes that is a real thriller.

And Van Loan's story has received wonderful treatment at the hand of Director Tod Browning and his aides. The story has been brought out on the screen splendidly. Miss Dean's role has been developed sufficiently to give her all the prominence she justly deserves while the action moves forward with an interest that is ever-accumulating. And certainly the lavish production awarded it shows that Universal gave Browning a free hand with the bank roll.

The story is very simple and devotes its time to following in the main, just three characters, Sari, the beggar girl, Captain Pemberton, an American, and organizer of a squad of desert police, and Achmet, a Shiek. Sari has seen Achmet commit a murder and for this, and because her physical beauties attract him he covets her for his harem. But Sari is in love with Pemberton.

Achmet buys the girl in marriage but Pemberton bribes the proxy in the ceremony to use his name instead of the Shiek's. When the latter discovers this he takes Sari and the American captive but his desert police come to the rescue and after a thrilling fight break into the palace. The Shiek and Pemberton have it out to the death with fists and knives and when it's all over there is the welcome old clinch to bring the story to a conclusion.

Miss Dean makes a fiery, tempestuous and appealing character of Sari and builds up her part with a lot of interesting business. Wheeler Oakman as Pemberton and Wallace Beery as the Shiek are both very satisfactory as indeed is all the rest of the cast.

One Big Advertising Smash on This and It'll Be Over With a Bang

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Universal is certainly handing the exhibitor a Jewel in this picture, one that will prove a box office jewel as well. And all you that play it ought to increase your advertising appropriations and go about exploiting it in a big way. In the first and most important place it has a wonder of a title around which to build advertising arguments. And a spread on this will get the crowds coming right at the start.

After the first day you won't have time to worry about the business you do at the box office. You'll be standing 'em up then, inside and outside. It's really the first shot that will make your whole campaign with respect to this, and so be sure to go about the firing process in a way worthy the spectacular and thrilling nature of the picture. For it sure is there with the goods.

Star Shows to Old-Time Effectiveness in Story That Fits Him Admirably

Eugene O'Brien in
"HIS WIFE'S MONEY"
Selznick-Select

DIRECTOR ..... Ralph Ince
AUTHORS .....May Tully and Du Vernet Rabbell
SCENARIO BY..R. Cecil Smith and E. Lord Corbett
CAMERAMAN ..... William J. Black
AS A WHOLE.....Unusual and very interesting romance with star showing in real old-time form.
STORY....Something out of the ordinary and builds up entertainingly; climax is rather conventional but leaves good taste.
DIRECTION ..... Generally capable
PHOTOGRAPHY....Many scenes reveal extremely dark backgrounds but important action registers plainly.
LIGHTINGS.....Better effects could have been obtained in lighting star and opposite.
CAMERA WORK ..... Good
STAR.....Photographs very well in this and gives most satisfactory performance; his best as a star.
SUPPORT.....Headed by Zena Keefe who is given deserved prominence.
EXTERIORS ..Adirondack mountains and western
INTERIORS ..... Always appropriate
DETAIL ..... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY....Objection of hero to living on his wife's money.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....5,192 feet

In "His Wife's Money" Eugene O'Brien seems to have found his proper sphere and estate as a star. This very unusual romance, a romance which has an interesting smattering of domestic economics, has been tailored to fit him by the authors, May Tully and Du Vernet Rabbell and those responsible for the adaptation, with the happy results that the completed work looms as by far the best picture he has had since he became a star.

Moreover, Mr. O'Brien photographs extremely well in the present picture. The cameraman seems to have studied his angles with much better judgment than that evinced in his previous picture "The Broken Melody." There are times when it is obvious that he might have been lighted to better effect but the general impression created is one of distinct superiority over past performances.

The story is out of the beaten path, tracing as it does the lives of Robert Harlowe and his very rich wife, Marion. She is unable to understand why he refuses to permit her to pay the household bills; she can not see what difference it makes and why he considers such a course a lowering of his self-respect.

Given this premise the authors have developed their plot with a degree of logic and truth that stimulates a real interest. Of physical action the picture reveals little, but the reality of the strained situation between husband and wife is ever striking home. Eventually Robert wins riches in the west and returns to break in the market the man who had attempted to lure his wife from him. This conclusion is about the only conventional episode in the picture. Nor does it present any apparent solution to the problem involved. But with Robert rich in his own right he feels able to at last claim his wife, and his action and the happy conclusion will meet with entire approval.

Mr. O'Brien plays almost eloquently the romantic passages of the picture which are many, while in the sequences where he suffers the humiliation of the husband's position, he registers points with a sure and appealing force. Zena Keefe as his leading woman is given considerable prominence and acquits herself creditably. Others are Louise Prussing, Dorothy Kent, Cyril Chadwick and Ned Hayes.

A Fine Advertising Angle to a Very Worthy Picture

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"His Wife's Money" is very pleasing entertainment because of its unusual story and this unusualness makes it a picture of distinction and one that should be handled from a distinctive advertising angle. This angle the story provides you in the question: "Should a husband live on his wife's money?" It doesn't take any great stretch of the imagination to conceive any number of interesting advertising arguments and readers centered on this idea. It is a point that is made very effectively in the title itself.

With this advertising opportunity that the picture offers together with the popularity of the star, which should leap again after this release is shown, and the advertising that has been accorded Ralph Ince particularly with respect to "The Land of Opportunity," "His Wife's Money" should prove a real money maker and give general satisfaction to all picture patrons.

The WHITE DOVE

ROBERTSON-COLE

It is not the action and the great "rushes" that make "The Sagebrusher" so wonderful and popular with exhibitors and the public. Yet, the action of the picture is tremendous,

It is a big production, a big story, because of its downright humanness, its warmth, its romance, its tenderness. Its love story is as warm as a mother's heart.

Millions of people are crowding into theatres to see and feel the wonderful players who live before their very eyes a genuine, beautiful drama of life.

"The Sagebrusher" has everything in it that all kinds of audiences like and seek on the screen. It was slowly, deliberately made and months were taken to give it that "touch" that can never be achieved by accident.

Its first-run successes with the largest and most important theatres have given it the rank of the leading production in most of the exchange territories of the country.

The Best Marguerite Clark Comedy in a Long Time

Marguerite Clark in
"EASY TO GET"
Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... Walter Edwards
AUTHORS .....Izola Forrester and Mann Page
SCENARIO BY .....Julia Crawford Ivers
CAMERAMAN ..... Hal Young
AS A WHOLE.....Light comedy much better than anything star has had since "Come Out of the Kitchen."
STORY.....Based on human comedy idea and goes into a number of unusual and surprising channels.
DIRECTION .....Edwards knows how to register this type of picture well and has done so here
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Very good
LIGHTINGS ..... Very good
CAMERA WORK ..... Effective
STAR.....Registers prettily (in her own hair once again) and plays role spiritedly.
SUPPORT....Harrison Ford puts vigor into role of leading man.
EXTERIORS ..... Good mountain stuff
INTERIORS ..... Always appropriate
DETAIL ..... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY....Bride overhears husband say she was "easy to get" and teaches him a lesson.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,110 feet

"Easy to Get" is a very nice little light comedy based on a human idea and this idea gets the spectator laughing right at the start. Milly Morehouse, just married to Bob, overhears her husband say to a friend on the train that she was "easy to get" and straightway she plans to leave him and, suiting action to the thought, hops off in the mountain wilds as soon as the train makes its first stop.

And with the initial premise thus established the authors proceed to pilot their characters through a number of unusual and surprising situations that maintain the interest well up to the conclusion which, of course, finds Bob ready and willing to confess that Milly was hard to get.

To a certain extent the interest of the story relies on this ability of the authors to spring surprises during the action for the ending is never in doubt for a moment. They have succeeded very well in this task and the situations through which Milly and Bob are piloted combine the elements of surprise and comedy to an appropriate degree.

For the sequence before the conclusion Milly conceives the idea of pretending that she is kidnapped by ruffians and sends a false note to Bob demanding $5,000 for her release. This he proves quite ready to part with after the chase that Milly has led him but Milly wasn't as sure of her fake kidnappers after all and they pocket the five thousand as they command the couple to walk off down the road. This is another very good comedy touch and brings the picture to an exceedingly pleasant finish.

Interwoven with the action concerning Milly and Bob is the pursuit of Pauline by Bob's pal, Dick. He finds this girl exceedingly hard to get until he practices the tactics formerly approved by Bob, after which he wins out. This is in the way of a contradictory parallel plot that magnifies all the humorous situations in the picture.

Walter Edwards is just the man for directing this sort of picture and he has registered all its twists with the utmost satisfaction. Marguerite Clark is starred in the role of Milly and makes a very delightful impression, appearing minus the blonde hair she has been wearing in recent pictures.

This Ought to Get Over Very Well Specially With the Women

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Since "Come Out of the Kitchen," Marguerite Clark hasn't had a better picture than "Easy to Get." While many of her intermediate pictures seemed to have lacked the vital comedy spark it is nearly always apparent throughout the present one and the results are gratifying if in no way startling.

Advertise this one specially to the women. Miss Clark always has been a favorite with the "backbone" of picture audiences and this picture will raise her stock appreciably. A relation of the premise on which the whole comedy is built by some such catch line as "She overheard her husband boast that she had been 'easy to get' and resolved to teach him a lesson," will certainly attract the women particularly and will hold out to all promise of a good comedy which the picture itself very well fulfills.

The authors have some note and it would be worth while to give them a play and also mention Harrison Ford whose work has long since made him one of the most popular leading men on the screen.

"The Perfect Plan"

This One Doesn't Measure Up to Standard of Plain Unvarnished Melodrama

Gladys Brockwell in
"THE DEVIL'S RIDDLE"
Fox

DIRECTOR ..... Frank Beal
AUTHOR ..... Edwin Levin
SCENARIO BY .....Ruth Ann Baldwin
CAMERAMAN ..... Sam Landers
AS A WHOLE.....Just a conventional melodrama that fails to convince in its major plot twists
STORY.....Looks as if they just had to have a story and concocted this one without much thought
DIRECTION....Satisfactory generally though sometimes quite stagey.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Average
LIGHTINGS ..... Same
CAMERA WORK .....Straight stuff
STAR.....Registers satisfactorily but isn't afforded usual emotional opportunities.
SUPPORT ..... Satisfactory
EXTERIORS .....Some northern "snow stuff" that is obviously of studio make.
INTERIORS ..... Plain
DETAIL.....When the old confetti flies in the door it's pretty hard to disguise it as snow.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Hero believes girl he loves has fallen until mutual friend wakes him up.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

They certainly didn't stop long to think about this story and polish it up and they ask you to take a whole lot of conventional and convenient situations for granted without attempting to back them up with any sort of polish outside of the most obvious melodrama. And why they chose to call it "The Devil's Riddle" is certainly a riddle.

The story opens up in a snow storm in the far north but the few flashes they give you of exteriors plainly reveal the fact that they were shot in the studio. Esther Anderson is alone in a cabin while her stepfather is agreeably snow-bound in a bar-room miles distant. Dr. Jim Barnes falls on the cabin step exhausted and Esther nurses him back to health. Thus the love story starts.

Jim finally volunteers to go to town for food but the trip does him up and he is taken in by Mrs. Potts who is anxious to have her daughter, Arline, marry him. When he regains his health he discovers that Esther has gone off with a cheap road show as soubrette. Next year the show plays Esther's home town and the leading lady, jealous, tells Jim that Esther has been receiving money from the manager.

Jim refuses to believe her innocent and so Esther goes to New York in search of a job finally becoming the model for Evers, a Russian artist. Evers eventually proposes and Esther, having heard of Jim's engagement to Arline, accepts. But she writes to an old friend in her home town, relating her sorrow and so he drags Jim to New York and the lovers are united. And Jim forgets all about Esther's supposed past.

This is just plain conventional, movie melodrama with no attempt at being artistic or pretentious. Nor is it at all powerful, inasmuch as it relies on such an aged and poorly worked trick as the falsely accused heroine to keep the story going. The direction is all right in the scenes where only a few characters appear but when it comes to the more expansive sets, rather heavily peopled, the effects are stagey and obvious.

Gladys Brockwell doesn't receive her quota of emotional opportunities in the role of Esther. William Scott appears as her leading man while others are Richard Cummings, Claire McDowell, Jack Curtis, Easter Walters, Nicholas Dunaew, Kate Price, Louis Fitzroy, Chance Ward, Vera Lewis and Tom Bates.

Even as Plain Melodrama This Will Be Found Lacking

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"The Devil's Riddle" is a poor attempt at the production of a straight out-and-out melodrama. It hasn't even the proven ingredients that make such pictures sought after. For instance, the usual villain who is often responsible for much of the melidrama's suspense is conspicuous by his absence. This might be all very well if the picture offered something unusual as an alternative, but as it stands the lack of this conventional standby is felt.

As a result the picture is hardly the kind to register with due satisfaction even before audiences that enjoy the purely elemental story. Some exhibitors may find in the title an invitation to go into exploitation centering around it, but this would be altogether misleading as where either the devil or his riddle comes in are questions hard to answer.

Might Well Be Great If Supplied With a New Set of Subtitles

Victor Seastrom in
"A MAN THERE WAS"
Swedish Biograph—Radiosoul Films, Inc.

DIRECTOR ..... Victor Seastrom
AUTHOR ..... Henrik Ibsen
SCENARIO BY .....L. E. Miller
CAMERAMAN .....J. Julius
AS A WHOLE.....Very powerful sea story marred in present form by subtitles.
DIRECTION.....Has handled the sea scenes wonderfully well and registered the drama effectively.
STORY.....Adapted from Ibsen's "Terje Viken"
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Generally very fine
LIGHTINGS ..... Good
CAMERA WORK.....Story would have run more smoothly if fadeouts had been employed properly and closeups would have heightened dramatic effects.
STAR .....Renders a powerful characterization
SUPPORT ..... Never prominent
EXTERIORS .....Wonderful shots of turbulent sea
INTERIORS ..... Suitable
DETAIL.....If subtitles were altered picture might achieve greatness.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Seaman's revenge changed to love through elemental forces.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,000 feet

There is no telling what fame "A Man There Was" might achieve if it were properly subtitled. Even in its present suit of subtitles its dramatic strength is apparent time and again but with the proper finish which a careful change would give it, the chances are that it would assume very valuable proportions. The present set endeavor to keep in rhyme and rhyming at every insert. Explanatory points that could be made easier and more forcefully through direct statements are sometimes lost through this endeavor. A sense of smoothness and continuity is absent. There are three or four exceedingly appropriate inserts of poetry. But the majority of them are very harmful.

The drama unfolded is one of strict elementals without any frills of counter-plot or byplot. It is the simple story of a seaman's contemplated revenge and how love interceded to distill his hate. His wife and baby had perished during a war after he had striven vainly to get food to the little island blockaded by the enemy from the mainland. He had been caught and languished five years in jail. Freed, he became a recluse, and one day a chance to avenge himself on the man who caused his tragedy presented itself but a helpless child worked his transformation.

All the sequences are handled very dramatically. Viken's attempt to save the boat from the man o'war and bring his precious load of corn to the starving islanders is pictured with a real thrill. The cameraman has handled his sea scenes excellently. Again when Viken, the recluse, puts out to the rescue of the yacht which proves to be owned by his nemesis, is the drama swift and strong. The sea in this sequence is turbulent and the picture of stormy emotions enacted against its background is fiercely effective.

There are places where a more efficient use of the fadeout and the introduction of closeups would obviously help the action but providing the subtitles are altered the picture stands as a very adequate production and one presenting a fundamentally dramatic tale.

The star, Victor Seastrom, is a splendid character actor and plays the role of Viken with feeling. His physique is admirable and his ability at makeup quite superior.

With Suggested Improvements This Should Register Very Well

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If the improvements in the way of subtitles suggested above are made "A Man There Was" ought to register very well. The Swedish-Biograph is one of the leaders in producing on the continent, a fact which has been proven more than once in the past.

The elemental character of the story might have been a drawback had not the production given it been entirely sympathetic. Certainly no sequence of sea scenes produced in this country has ever equaled in sheer natural force the sequence that leads to the climax of "A Man There Was."

The picture offers good opportunities for exploitation. The fact that it is foreign made, might easily attract now as the public has taken a greater interest in European products. Publicity could be derived from the fact that the star is an American and while not known here is exceedingly popular in Europe. Of course the Ibsen angle should be played up, too.

A good advertising angle take sshape in thsi Biblical reader, "Do you abide by 'An Eye for an Eye'—or by 'Love Thine Enemies'?"

INTERIORS ..... Handsome
DETAIL ..... All right
CHARACTER OF STORY....Hero believes woman he loves has a wicked past until evidence forthcomes to the contrary.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 5,800 feet

"The Forbidden Woman" is an old-fashioned movie melodrama that has been all dressed up in pretty exteriors and handsome settings but which fails to generate any degree of drama or suspense because of the inferior manner in which it has been treated. For even though the story is admittedly conventional it afforded opportunities for the development of strong dramatic crises. But either the scenario writer's lack of appreciation or the director's neglect has resulted in the continuity keeping right on in the same flat tone throughout.

The star appears as Diane Sorel, a French actress, whose misfortune it is to have a maddened suitor commit suicide in her apartment. She flees to America, sickened at the false scandal the event has created, and there in the country meets Malcolm Kent, a writer. It is a case of love at first sight but then, of course, the black shadow of Diane's past must intrude.

Coincidentally enough the worthless one who took his life before Diane was the husband of Kent's sister. Also coincidentally enough Diane had posed under another name before the man she loves. When Kent discovers that Diane is the French actress whom he believes a bad woman there is a scene but it never reaches dramatic heights. It is neither expertly led up to, with the element of suspense ever in view, nor is it more than superficially telling itself.

Later Kent for some reason intrudes in Diane's house and fiercely attacks her but then when Diane reinsists she is a good woman he departs. A perfectly nice happy ending is brought about by the appearance of Kent's sister who explains that Diane was really guiltless of the suicide, thus corroborating the actress' own defense.

The whole production moves along conventional lines. The story might easily have been camouflaged with effective melodramatic development but it looks like a case of incompetency in the production end. The settings are handsome and there are some beautiful country estate exteriors, delightfully lighted. And a graceful Russian wolf hound is prominent in the action. But of a well-built up, sustained interest the picture has none.

Clara Kimball Young seems quite lost in the conventional role of Diane, after her brilliant performance in "Eyes of Youth." Conway Tearle is a pleasant leading man and makes his few emotional outbursts sincere. Others are Jiguel Laone, Kathryn Adams, Winter Hall, Milla Davenport, Stanton Williams and John MacKinnon.

They'll Be Expecting Something Better Than This After "Eyes of Youth"

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Eyes of Youth" was such a splendid picture in every respect that even a moderately good picture with the same star would have a rather difficult time following in its tracks and endeavoring to live up to its reputation. And certainly your audiences will be expecting something better than the fare which is offered in "The Forbidden Woman."

Of course; you will be very likely to attract large patronage by a display of the title and the name of the star, but the picture isn't there to back up the interest that the advertising and exploitation is likely to arouse. The best thing to do if you find the star a big drawing card is to slip this one in quietly, say as little as you can about it and pray that the next production from Equity gets back into good form.

Star Pretty as Usual But Story Adaptation Badly Handled

Marion Davies in
"APRIL FOLLY"
Cosmopolitan Prod.—Paramount-Artcraft

DIRECTOR ..... Robert Z. Leonard
AUTHOR ..... Cynthia Stockley
SCENARIO BY ..... Adrian Johnson
CAMERAMAN ..... Albert Siegler
AS A WHOLE.....Mostly a series of close-ups of Miss Davies; generally amateurish.
STORY.....Adaptation of Cosmopolitan Magazine story has little or no screen quality and several unnecessary characters.
DIRECTION....Handled big sets well; allowed the star to pose too much.
PHOTOGRAPHY ..... Good
LIGHTINGS ..... Generally clear
CAMERA WORK ..... Ordinary
STAR.....Very pretty and always photographed to good advantage; didn't do much acting.
SUPPORT.....Conway Tearle has done much better work; others suitable.
EXTERIORS ..... Didn't look like ocean vessel
INTERIORS ..... Mask ball set good
DETAIL.....Dame Scandal and old man comedy fall flat.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Young authoress in search of adventure story.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,983 feet

The producers have made an unhappy choice in selecting "April Folly" for Marion Davies because of its absurdity and few possibilities for the personality of the star. Of course, it furnishes a romance between the young writer and her publisher which is all very nice, but the greater part of the picture which tells the story of April Poole's latest novel, lacks the elements of good screen material.

It surely doesn't boast of anything new or original. All the familiar, old-time screen characters are on deck including Mrs. Scandal, the comedian who isn't, the youthful adventuress, and above all, the famous jewel and two wicked fellows plotting to steal it. Throughout there is evidence of padding.

Miss Davies is foremost in the production from start to finish. She is very pretty and has been photographed to the best advantage at all times. The part requires little acting, but gives her plenty of opportunity to pose and look cute. Conway Tearle, playing opposite, is capable of much better work than he does in "April Folly."

They start off by having Marion read her latest story to her editor and publisher after informing them that they will play the leading roles. The young writer's story opens at a masked ball where she meets Conway Tearle, a business man who later comes to her rescue on board a vessel bound for South Africa. Marion is disguised as Lady Diana Mannister whose identity she has assumed for the adventure she can get out of it for herself and at the some time to allow Lady Diana to marry the man of her choice.

Marion has in her possession the famous Mannister diamond which she is to deliver to Lady Diana's aunt and it is because of this that all the complications develop aboard ship. But in the end the writer-adventuress captures the crooks plotting to secure the diamond, delivers it safely to the aunt and wins the love of Tearle.

Others in the cast are Madeline Marshall, Hattie De Laro, Amelie Summerville, Herbert Frank, Warren Cook, Spencer Charters and Charles Peyton.

Rely on the Star's Attractiveness to Draw

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Your main bet in playing "April Folly" will be in the name of the star on account of the reputation she has gained for her beauty. Then too you can make use of the fact that it is an adaptation of Cynthia Stockley's story which appeared in Cosmopolitan. Some Attractive posters of the star in masquerade costume and some stills of close-ups would attract attention in your lobby.

Use your originality in advertising the production and recall the star's last picture, "The Cinema Murder," which was about the best thing she has done. If your folks saw this they will probably come again, but it wouldn't be advisable to do much promising in connection with "April Folly."

Some catchlines might read: "Her name was April Poole but she was no April fool. See Marion Davies capture the jewel thieves in her story within a story, 'April Folly'." Or, "She wrote a story in which her publisher was the hero and the editor the villain. See the story come true in 'April Folly,' Marion Davies' latest production at the blank theater."

DIRECTION.....Certainly doesn't show any discrimination between important sequences and mere details.
PHOTOGRAPHY .....Fair
LIGHTINGS.. ....Have the flickers several times
CAMERA WORK.....Ordinary
STAR.....Gives sincere performance but faults of production restrain its effect.
SUPPORT .....Same
EXTERIORS .....Pretty
INTERIORS .....Some good, some fair
DETAIL.....Picture presents a poor case of editing in some places while number of subtitles fail to run into action smoothly.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....Girl betrayed by foster-father of man she loves.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 4,700 feet

"The Amazing Woman" is built around the highly sensational situation of the heroine betrayed by the father of the hero while the latter is away, only in this case the father is denoted as a foster-father to make a little milder the sensational dose. There is no denying the melodramatic possibilities of such a central idea but Lloyd Carleton who had much to do with the production, failed to cash in on them.

The continuity is not smooth, nor are there the requisite lightings and shadings of plot to create dramatic moments. The story wanders.

In addition to these faults of dramatic construction there is the matter of lighting which is strangely different in various parts of the picture. They have the flickers in more places than one while the "hazey" closeup is used on the star with obvious and not artistic effect. Besides the editing of the film is not skilful and these technical faults magnify the defects of the drama to a great degree.

Stripped of its side issues the plot relates of how Anitra heeded unwisely the promises of Strong to make of her a singer, after her heart was carried away to France by his foster-son, Dr. Ralph Strong. Sadder but wiser Anitra then devotes her services to crippled children, and erected for them a hospital. She operates this with funds taken in at her gambling establishment over which she presides at night.

It was the obvious attempt of the producer to bring Ralph back into the action to discover how his Anitra had fallen but the results are ineffectual as far as the dramatic is concerned. Ralph returns, becomes mayor of the city and cleans up Anitra's gambling house without discovering that she is the proprietress. He then brings his foster-father to meet her. Anitra faints at the sight of him. Later Strong passes out from a very convenient heart attack and Ralph after acclaiming that the past is forgotten takes Anitra in his arms.

Ruth Clifford, the star and her supporting cast including Edward Coxen, Andrew Robson and Richard Morris suffer from the character of the production.

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

Ruth Clifford in
"THE AMAZING WOMAN"
Lloyd Carleton Prod.—Republic

"The Amazing Woman" doesn't offer entertainment of a satisfactory order and the further probability is that it will get laughs from many audiences; specially those of intelligence who are accustomed to better things in the picture line. And in passing it may be said that most all audiences are accustomed to better things.

And the faults of this picture have no box office angle to balance them to any degree approaching the level. The name of the star is, perhaps, its strongest asset and even she has yet to come into her own. She has been absent from the screen for quite some time and even before she was never one of the big drawing cards.

SUPPORT.....Thomas Carrigan lifts the picture considerably by his fine performance in a none too pleasant role.
EXTERIORS .....Only one or two used
INTERIORS ..... Correct
DETAIL.....Some details in story could have stood more explanation.
CHARACTER OF STORY.....City chap who weds the innocent little country girl.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....4,833 feet

There isn't much in "In Walked Mary" to bring it above the average mark. The story itself is not very much different than some other pictures dealing with the city chap and the innocent country girl, except perhaps the author should be thanked for having the city fellow a virtuous young man instead of the usual willun type.

Thomas Carrigan, the fellow from New York, who is seeking health in the South, plays an unpleasant part with a certainty and whole-heartedness that helps to lift the production even more than the performance of the star who has a role with little appeal. Miss Caprice plays "Miss Innocence" well enough but five reels of it is too much.

The picture opens up by emphasizing the strict conventionalism of the South by having the negro mammy refusing all offers to aid the orphaned June. But right on top of that June takes the invitation of her city acquaintance "to call on him when in trouble" very literally and arrives unannounced at his home just as he is about to tender his farewell bachelor dinner.

However, June wants to go to school and it is for this reason that she seeks the assistance of her friend although previously when he offered to buy in an old bed at the auction sale which disposed of June's parents' belongings, it took some persuasion before the said Southern pride could be induced to accept the offer.

To avoid explanations Carrigan secretes June in his room while the dinner is in progress, but June answers the phone call of his fiance. However, fiance Vivian Osborne who is carrying on an affair with Stanley Walpole, a friend of Carrigan's, accepts her fiance's explanations and even takes June into her house until they find a school for her—which they never do.

June isn't long in finding out that her hero's sweetheart is playing him false so she hits upon the plan of vamping Walpole away from Vivian but only compromises herself in the eyes of her city hero until he discovers Vivian and Walpole together and then he goes down South in search of June who has run back to her Southern home. Then, of course, there's the usual clutch.

"IN WALKED MARY"
Capellani Prod.—Pathe

As stated previously, there's not much in this one to lift it above the average offering except perhaps a very fine performance on the part of Carrigan who handles a disagreeable role in a very effective manner. In communities where the star is well liked, "In Walked Mary" will probably be received without any serious kicks because June lives up to her reputation of the innocent young miss.

Also it will get by with "fan" audiences because everything turns out happily for the shero and because it's "just what they expected." If you have used the star's former pictures, you will be able to get away with this but if she is new to your audience, this wouldn't be the best of introductions.

For catchlines you could try: "Young Miss Innocence went forth in search of a school but found a lover." Or, "She went to the city in search of a school but really looking for her lover and found he was already engaged. See how the unhappy affair turns out in June Caprice's latest Capellani production, 'In Walked Mary' at the blank theater."

"WHAT WOULD YOU DO?"

During the last stages of this production on the Coast, Mr. Lawrence was unexpectedly called to New York—several days work remained—so, with all the sets up, and the subsequent work prepared—Denison Clift was called upon to finish it—aided by Mr. Lawrence's assistant. This is to correct any misleading impression conveyed by recent advertisements.

Some Short Reels

"Four Times Foiled," Chester

If C. L. Chester can maintain the same standard in his forthcoming two reel comedies, as the one set in his first, he may recline peacefully in his chair and begin to count the incoming currency. Certainly, he has started well, for this is one of the best animal comedies turned out this season. Snooky, a feminine ape which plays a male role is the most prominent character. And what an exhibition she gives! A few more such and Joe Martin will have to look to his laurels. In addition, a horse and dog perform well, as does a babe.

Novelty is something not too frequently found in present day pictures but this has a full-sized share of it. Time after time, the trained ape puts over humorous bits that register solidly. At the start, the portion which shows her smoking and fishing causes a grin. The scene with the lobster, that in the small auto, the bit with the pig and baby, concerning the ownership of a bottle of milk, her attempts to amuse the infant by tumbling and rolling about, the efforts of the animal to elude the trio of villains by placing the child in a grip and then the two trying to make a get-away in a barrel, the airoplane stuff and all else combine in making this a hit. Not only is Snooky funny, but the stunts of a horse are splendid. The human characters also perform well, the bit where the villain is ejected by his landlord, following the throwing out of his belongings being good for a hearty laugh. Katherine Hilliker wrote the titles. The offering runs about 1,660 feet and is a scream from beginning to end.

"Hoodooed," Paramount-de Haven

"Hoodooed," a two-reel light comedy featuring Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven is conceived around a flock of "superstition gags." The husband believes in all the old tricks, such as throwing salt over his shoulder, picking up pins, four leaf clovers, etc. His employer comes to his house for dinner and tells him he has decided to promote him and this happens despite the fact that the young man has just smashed a mirror and that the date is Friday, the thirteenth. Reforming he proceeds to throw a horse shoe from his house but this connects with his employer's head and he is brought back unconscious—a surprise finish indeed. The comedy is throughout mildly amusing but the superstition gags have been considerably worked specially of late and they seem in danger of being over-worked.

"Daredevil Jack," Pathe

Numerous thrills have been crammed into this episode of the Jack Dempsey serial, which has a fight scene in a seacoast dive, in which the hero routs its various patrons and makes his escape in time to see the crowd attacking the heroine. He hops into a large truck and starts riding down the mob, when it ends. Although the ending is one that will keep the fan in suspense, they might have had the cameraman closer to the moving vehicle.

"Find the Girl," Pathe

Hitherto, there has been a thematic weakness in many of the Snub Pollard comedies. Most of them, however, have had as redeeming features either humorous situations, or knock-about bits of real value. In this production, there are only two scenes that are in any way funny, the rest consisting merely of chase stuff, or ordinary slap-stick material. The portion showing the newspaper office, early in the offering, and the part wherein the entire villainous crew, infesting "The Web," a burlesqued dive in the slums abduct the innocent maid will provoke mirth, as will some of the footage in which the darkey youngster appears, but the rest will probably find the average audience passive. It deals with the efforts of an entire newspaper staff to get the news about a wealthy damsel who has been abducted. After much of the riotous, hero Snub Pollard effects the rescue. There is much shooting, tumbling, falling, etc., especially in the latter portion.

"Topics of the Day," 43, Timely Films-Pathe

Variety is what makes this issue of Topics of the Day worth while. In addition to remarks about prohibition, marriage, rents, and the other subjects which are commented upon in every issue of every offering of this sort, there are several gags, gleaned from various joke columns and bits about subjects that are not dealt with so often. Originality is another of the distinct assets of most of material included.

"Raise the Rent," Pathe

One thing, more than anything else, will enable this Snub Pollard comedy to score a success, and that is the fact that it is timely. Rather than depending on a variety of comedy bits, after the manner of most of these Pollard reels, they have concocted a very satisfactory story with just enough slap-stick stuff to enable the star to put over some of his favorite stunts. At the beginning, the portion where he is seen splitting peas for soup with a huge knife will draw a laugh, although it is not essential to the theme, and after that, the various means employed by the mustached comedian to secure an apartment hold attention. In the finish, his fond wife rigs up a tent in the open and there is another laugh—when they put up a sign to the effect that no vacancies remain for the benefit of a fairly large dog. Most of the folks have probably had some trouble finding suitable lodging or trouble with landlords, and this will hit the spot.

"Solitude," Educational

To screen this scenic, Robert Bruce has journeyed into the northland, and selected hills, covered with pine trees for much of his material. Throughout, the offering is replete with shots that are truly beautiful and the production measures up to some of the best he has turned out. A few scenes stand out in particular, one of the sun behind some evergreens, and another showing the quiet, after a storm that brought snow had been followed by a Chinook that cleared it all away. Towards the close, the shots showing the sun sinking beneath the clouds, and the long shadows of the fir trees, with the lonely figure of a pedestrian winding his way forward hold attention. Several bits taken against the sun, the sort that Bruce always films well, are to be found in the piece, which has been titled excellently and is a highly commendable scenic.

Bray Pictograph 425, Goldwyn

Opening this Bray reel, is a portion devoted to the Hunting Wasp, screened unusually well. It shows, very clearly, the insect killing its prey, storing it away and its different parts. "The Movies Exposed" is the title given the following part, which shows a film performer removing a make-up which makes her appear aged and infirm. Another of Max Fleischer's "Out of the Ink Well" cartoons winds up the offering.

Bray Pictograph 426, Goldwyn

How locomotives, travelling at a high rate of speed, may now take large quantities of water without stopping, by means of long troughs placed besides the tracks, is shown in the initial portion of Bray Pictograph, 426. After that comes a section dealing with the Murre, an unusual bird. "A Flying Furnace," depicting the wired garments used by many aviators, supplying them with heat while high in the air follows and a "Jerry on the Job" cartoon, called "A Warm Reception" closes. The latter is funny and will provoke laughter.

24 WD 2/29/20

Short Reels

"Broken Silence," Ford-Goldwyn

This Ford picture shows the manner in which children who have lost their hearing are educated and taught to speak. Although the manner in which it has been screened shows nothing any theater patron might find objectionable, the atmosphere is rather morbid.

"Light Hearts and Leaking Pipes," Universal

Until the closing portion is reached, this Universal two reel slapstick comedy registers a number of laughs. There is no story at all in the production, but there are several bits of knock-about stuff that will cause mirth. The scene at the beginning in which the plumber, his wife and their child give vent to their emotions and sing, the shot in which hubby smokes an improvised pipe and the bit wherein wifey washes clothes pinned on to a line, submerging them in a tub while they are thus hung send this off to a good start, the latter section being especially funny. After that the plumber begins to masticate noodles and of course, hits his wife with a mass of them. Result: a chase. Most of the following footage is devoted to a riot in the home of a vamp, in which several of her lovers and husband chase each other about. The plumber with a flaming torch, and one of the others with a pair of wicked-looking revolvers break up everything, the other woman in the production appears, everyone hops into an automobile and the usual burlesqued policemen enter the offering. A novel bit is that where two of the uniformed gentry chop down a tree in which two others are perched. The finish finds them all about to speed away.

"The Spider Monkey," Mentor

A number of things make this a highly commendable reel. To begin with, all of it is unusual. There are three parts, the first dealing with the Spider Monkey, the second being devoted to scenes of Turkey and the third and last to fishing with Cormorants. The initial portion has been colored excellently and includes several corking close-ups of the peculiar little animal, found in South America. Remarkably fine photography, is the keynote in the second section, all of the scenes having been screened clearly and tinted with judgment. In the latter part, the method of using Cormorants to bring up fish, tying the lower parts of their necks first, so that they may not swallow their quarry, and then forcing them to disgorge more than maintains interest. As good a reel as Mentor has turned out.

"The Cunning Mr. Fox," Mentor

Opening with footage devoted to the Fox and closing with splendidly colored scenes of Algeria, this Mentor subject holds the eye. In the first part, in addition to some very good shots of the animal, there are scenes showing two of them breaking into hen house and then storing away their prey. The Algerian scenes do not follow one another in any particular order, no special attention having been paid to any sort of continuity, but nevertheless, they are all of sufficient value to hold attention. Especially worthy of praise is the scene coming out of the tunnel, and then the few shots that follow immediately thereafter.

"The Silkless Bank Note," Republic

Good detective stories are quite rare now-a-days, but the first of the William J. Flynn two-reel dramas of that type is decidedly meritorious. The manner in which it has been screened is up to the standard, Herbert Rawlinson in the stellar role gives a satisfactory exhibition, and there is enough sentiment attached to devotion of a little Irish terrier to his dead master, to make up for the lack of love interest. Carl Harbaugh who directed kept the offering going in good shape and Wilson Mizner has furnished a very satisfactory screen version, although the production appears to have been carried somewhat beyond its natural climax.

When a counterfeit $5 bill makes its appearance on the lower East Side, and the fellow who passed it makes his escape, Herbert Rawlinson takes the case in hand. He examines the bill and gets a clue. Meanwhile the escaping counterfeiter has been wounded, and his compatriot in crime, fearing discovery, does not hesitate in shooting him. Rawlinson, who has discovered dog's hair instead of silk in the bill, affects a disguise, gets some information as to a little terrier and eventually succeeds in having the villain captured. To do so, however, he poses as another counterfeiter. In the end, Rawlinson adopts the dog.

"The Sour Violin," Fox

There are numerous funny bits of business in this Mutt and Jeff cartoon. A great deal of it is hokum, however, and several of the captions have been devoted to satirizing classic music and musicians in a manner not highly original. The stuff has been animated in good style, includes much that will provoke mirth and closes with some footage that will coax smiles from the average audience. In this, the long and short duo operate a phonograph store. Both are rather hungry and Jeff proceeds to consume all of the records. When these are demanded, he enters one of the machines and produces the desired melodies. All goes well until a dog and cat enter and raise a racket. At first, a patron is delighted with the alleged tune, but when she sees Jeff's face protruding from the horn, departs. Business of fainting and seeing stars, while pups and kittens flock out of Jeff's clothing. A rather foolish offering, but funny in its foolishness.

"The Blacksmith," Arrow

With a better story about which to wind some of the incidents included in this Hank Mann two-reeler, it might have been made into a commendable comedy. As it is, the offering is drawn out beyond its natural conclusion, lacks much resembling novelty in theme, and but for a few redeeming bits, one of which is rather broad and will be considered indelicate by some falls short of the desired mark. Fred C. Windermere, who directed, has done as well as could be expected with the stuff at hand.

Mann is seen as a blacksmith's assistant at the start. Learning that the smith's daughter has inherited the local barber shop, but must marry almost immediately to take possession, the villain sets out to make her his bride, securing as usual, the co-operation of her fond father. She flees with Hank and they are married while speeding away by a typical comedy village constable. At this point, the piece could have been ended, but they saw fit to delve into the experiences of the youthful couple after the tonsorial establishment has become theirs. It is an excuse for more slapstick stuff, some of which will get results, but most of which will not impress strongly.

"Kineto Review," No. 28, Cinema Classics

Creditable photography is always an asset, but in this reel, the unusually good work of the camera man is not sufficient to overcome the lack of suitable scenic material and other defects. The subject deals with Brazil and starts with stuff shot from a moving train. Unfortunately, there is nothing unusual about any of the sites selected, until the village of Escabar is reached, when there is some worthwhile footage. The manner in which the water with contrasting territory in the background has been screened shows it off to best advantage. Otherwise, however, there is little to give cause for great enthusiasm.

How They Do It

A Simple Idea of a Pufflicist's Dream —Oh, No; They Do Not Believe in Knocking

At the big party of the A. M. P. A. (advertisers) on Friday night one of the features was a skit in which the stars appearing were Jerome Beatty of Famous Players, who proved himself a regular actor; Paul Lazarus of United Artists' and Nat Rothstein. All appeared in their regular parts except Rothstein who appeared as Arthur James.

The dialogue, which provoked roars from the crowd, follows:

Lazarus—"Gee! but it's cold out."

Beatty—"Cold—that's no name for it."

Lazarus—"The landlady tipped me this morning that if I didn't bring some jack back with me to-night I'd find my room locked."

Beatty—"I'm bad off too—can you imagine a coupl' of smart guys like us broke and all these four flushers getting away with big dough? There's one guy I never could stand, that Paul Gulick. Of all the rotten writers he's the limit."

Lazarus—"Yes, he sure slings a weak wing."

Beatty—"Harry Reichenbach's with Equity now."

Lazarus—"Say, ain't things tough enough without bringing that guy's name in?"

Beatty—"But I was just thinking. Here he goes and gets a couple of stories in the paper about that monkey in Tarzan—now I'll bet he's dragging down over a hundred bucks a week."

Lazarus—"Well, I know a bank burglar that gets more than that—only he takes chances."

Beatty—"If Reichenbach hadn't that gray hair, he'd be balancing beans in some stew house—he sure gets away with murder."

Lazarus—"I saw Harry with Nat Rothstein yesterday, they're with the same troupe now— used to be against each other."

Beatty—"They got to be friendly now, for fear one of them will tip Joe Schnitzer off about the other."

Lazarus—"I see Jerry Beatty grabbed John Flynn's job over at Paramount. There's a fine bird to be general advertising manager, he couldn't get Zukor's name in the Northside news if Zukor really did something worth while."

Beatty—"I admit Beatty stinks, but he's not as bad as some of the punks in the business."

Lazarus—"Did you see Pollyanna? That's some camembert."

Beatty—"Speaking of Pollyanna, did you see the advertisements Lazarus is getting out for Hi Abrams?"

Lazarus—"Say, that fellow's a puzzle to me. The Knickerbocker Ice Company lost a wonderful driver when Lazarus took up publicity."

Beatty—"I'll say so, he surely kept the stuff out of the papers for Vitagraph in great shape."

Lazarus—"Things is sure tough when two guys like us can't seem to grab something big and these burglars getting away with dough, why I'll bet Bill Fox is pay-

What of Wall Street

that the screen will pretty nearly elect the President of the United States. I refer to the campagin of 1925. Wall Street looks far ahead And that is why Wall Street today is interested in companies which in turn are seeking to purchase and are purchasing theaters as well as having an interest in production.

"If the picture industry happens to present a profit to the financial powers interested in picture companies, all well and good. And the Wall Street operators are working in the picture companies in a manner to bring this about. But even if the profit doesn't show, so long as the loss is not too great, Wall Street will be satisfied. Because by devious ways, Wall Street will circulate its political propaganda in some film best suited to the purpose. And the millions who daily attend picture entertainment will visualize this and after a while the purpose will be made plain."

"Wall Street cannot control the press," he continued. "Publication interests are too diversified, and besides many readers of the newspapers realize that according to the political complexion of the publication so its political news is presented But everyone who goes to see picture entertainment must see the political propaganda unless they wish to close their eyes.

"After years of turbulence, after long periods of which this industry has found its way to the pinnacle of entertainment of the American people, are we producers to sit back and watch this happen without protest? Are we to allow what should be the greatest form of entertainment the world has ever known to have our theaters and our productions used for political purposes?

"Because if we sit back supinely and allow this, who is to be blamed if the entertainment seeking public, realizing eventually how they are being used, will take from us that which is our legitimate and our honest share?"

Pay Day Show

Walkerville, Mich.—"Get it while they've got it" is the policy of C. C. Turning who operates the Pastime. This is a town which has a population of 350, and as practically all of the people here and in the vicinity are workingmen, it has been found inadvisable to have matinee performances. Instead he instituted a special show on pay day, for the harvesters and lumberjacks. The result was the people attending the house exceeded the population of the town. Since then other houses in this section have also adopted the plan of running additional performances on pay-day and are reaping a bountiful harvest therefrom.

I Believe

I BELIEVE in the Motion Picture Industry; in its permanency as an institution of Amusement.

I believe in its future as the paramount factor in the world's Educational scheme.

I believe in the Producers—the men who created this industry.

I believe in large rewards for their Genius, their Courage and their Capital, which has made possible the profitable employment of thousands, and the entertainment of the millions.

I believe in the Director who has helped to elevate the standard of Motion Picture Production to the position of first rank among high class divertisements.

I believe that the big director of today, will be the Greater director of the future.

I believe in the Assistant Director—who will be the director of tomorrow.

I believe in the Stars, whose great personalities have attracted millions to the theatre and linked them inseparably to motion pictures.

I believe in the Artists who have not yet arrived—who play the lesser roles—the Stars that are to be.

I believe in the Author, upon whom the standards of the drama of the screen must, in the final analysis, depend.

I believe not in "just good," but in better pictures which make their appeal to the wholesome instincts of society.

I believe in Honest Business—in a fair division of the spoils among all those engaged in the advancement of the profession.

I believe in Team work—in the pulling together of Author, Director, Artist, Producer and Manager.

I BELIEVE THAT EDWARD SMALL, Inc., has truly fostered this spirit of co-operation and inter-dependence among the thousands whom he represents and who depend upon him for workers and for work.

I believe that I must represent the Producer who buys, as truly, as I represent the Artist, Author and Director who sell.

I believe that I shall prosper, only as I maintain and strive to improve, the high standard of dependable service which has brought us where we are.

I believe that in my capacity of business manager, I form an indispensable link—that I am helping to lubricate the wheels of Motion Picture Progress.

Faithfully,

Edward Small

At Broadway Theaters

This Is How First Run Houses Are Presenting Their Programs This Week

The following illustrates how the leading Broadway theaters presented their programs this week. This feature will appear regularly in the Wednesday issue of WID'S DAILY.

Rivoli

There was nothing unusual in the presentation at the Rivoli this week. An overture from "If I Were King" headed the program, followed by a Bruce Scenic, "The Log of the La Viajera."

Emanuel List, basso profundo, sang the "Armorer's Song" from Robin Hood. The Rivoli Pictorial contained no particular sensation. The feature, "Mary's Ankle," followed a soprano solo.

A great amount of laughter was accorded the Chaplin re-issue, "The Count." The drummer with his "sound" instruments imitated Charlie drinking wine and his fat friend manipulating

Theater Owners Say United Artists Book on Rental Basis—Statement from Abrams

The Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce at a regular meeting yesterday at the Astor framed the following telegram which was sent to Mary Pickford in California:

"The Theater Owners Chamber of Commerce is pleased to note that your selling organization has changed its attitude in relation to the releasing of your pictures on a straight rental basis instead of the percentage basis, which this organization in common with other organizations throughout the country has deemed and does deem unfair and injurious to interests of the entire film industry, ,affecting alike the exhibitor, the producer, the star and others employed in every branch of the industry."

Hiram Abrams of United Artists issued a statement last night in which he stated that his organization intended sticking to percentage but that "if he (the exhibitor) wants to play our pictures that way (on a rental basis) we'll let him, because though he is the equal beneficiary under the percentage plan, if he will not take the extra profits, it is not for us to go against his will in the matter."

the soup. The contrivances add to the humor and afforded some fun in themselves. "Intermezzo" from "Cavaleria Rusticana" on the organ completed the bill.

Strand

The overture at the Strand this week was given a very artistic and novel setting. The orchestra rendered Tchaikovsky's "1812," representing the advance of Napoleon on Moscow and his retreat. The stage setting consisted of a drop depicting the Russian town and when the music indicated the height of the conflict, flashlight explosions added to the reality.

The Strand Topical Review, selected from various weeklies, contained some good air pictures taken in the Grand Canyon. A. Smiroff, tenor of the Petrograd Opera Company, sang "M'Appari" from Martha."

After the feature, "Partners of the Night," a Goldwyn production, a female quartette sang "Venetian Boat Songs." A stage setting representing a canal in Venice with a gondola added to the atmosphere. This offering met with spontaneous applause. A Bruce Scenic, "Chasing a Horizon," was effectively shown to the accompaniment of violin and cello solos. An organ solo concluded.

Broadway

Vitagraph's "The Sporting Duchess' is the feature at Moss' Broadway and though it is used to close the bill it is by all odds the high spot on the program. The program opens with "Il Guarany" as the overture and subsequently news pictures, largely from Pathe, and the Literary Digest comments are shown.

At B'way Theaters

The latter, as is usually the case, drew a bundle of laughs. A Christie comedy, "License Applied For" also registered well.

Hugo Jansen's "Powder-Puff Follies," a girl revue, is held over. "The Sporting Duchess" followed. This went along largely on its own merits without much support from the orchestra except the usual rapid tempo music in the race track scenes, but got over with a matinee crowd in fine shape. Much comment heard on Alice Joyce's gowns.

Capitol

As usual the Capitol theater has a large string of musical and novelty features preceeding the exhibition of the headliner. Metro's "The Right of Way." The condensed opera is omitted this week but the omission is only temporary and next Sunday will see another one staged as this form of entertainment has proven popular at the big house. In its stead there are a number of vaudeville acts. These acts scored pretty well but the Capitol crowds are never warm to this type of entertainment.

Nat Finston's orchestra renders Tchaikowsky's sixth symphony which would be appropriate rendered immediately before the picture, although at the Capitol these features were on the opposite ends of the bill. Another musical number is "The Artist's Dream" which utilizes a stage setting by Wenger and which calls for the services of a violinist, tenor and danseuse.

Aside from the feature the pictorial part of the program includes the second of the Flynn series of detective stories, "The Five Dollar Plate," which registered very well and the Hy Mayer Travelaugh for the week which went big owing to its burlesque of New York's recent blizzard. Localizing the program in this respect always seems to go well as Hy Mayer's previous work has proven.

Rialto

Nothing heavy is allowed to intrude in the Rialto program this week, all the pictures and musical numbers being of a light nature and reflecting the atmosphere of the feature "Judy of Rogue's Harbor." This seems to be the ideal type of bill for a house like the Rialto as it catches transients as well as catering to regular patrons. The overture from Rossini's "Italiana in Algeria" a comic opera opens the bill and this is followed by the Rialto Magazine which alternates between the spectacular and amusing topics. Just previous to the feature Betty Anderson, soprano, sings "Annie Laurie." It fits admirably in this position on the bill and creates the right "atmosphere" for the feature. "Judy of Rogues' Harbor" made a big hit with the matinee crowd, composed mostly of women and children. At its conclusion a trumpeter played much of the crowd out with "Stabat Mater" and subsequently the Sunshine comedy "Private Husband" registered in best knockabout-slapstick fashion the burlesque "Romeo and Juliet" scene being its highlight.

Deals Understood Closed for California, Portola and Imperial Theaters All First Run Houses

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

San Francisco—H. D. H. Connick, chairman of the finance committee of Famous Players has closed negotiations for the transfer of the California, Portola and Imperial theaters to the holdings of Famous Players-Lasky.

Local representatives of the company deny the purchase but the news emanates from an unquestionable source.

Connick is understood to be hurrying eastward to catch Adolph Zukor's signature to the contracts before the latter leaves for Europe.

The transaction gives Famous Players half of the first runs here and is generally looked upon as being a further source of trouble for independent operators.

The above mentioned theaters are those conducted by Eugene H. Roth and have been more or less under control of Famous Players interests for some time past, it is generally understood.

A determined effort was made to talk to Adolph Zukor last night to give the coast wire an official flavor but Mr. Zukor could not be reached.

"Big 4" Get Comedy

"U" Sues for $100,000

Film Exchange, Inc., in Boston, which released "U" productions in New England.

The plaintiff's contract was for the New England states and it is alleged that the defendant is trying to dispose of the pictures here without the plaintiff's authority and the sale was made without the plaintiff's knowledge. The complaint further alleges that the defendant has advertised these films for foreign countries and that 500 reels have been sold and exhibited in Louisiana, Ohio, Mexico, Central South America, England, France and Germany. Universal alleges that because of the war Europe is practically a virgin field and to permit these films to be sold in Germany at this time will cause great damage to the plaintiff amounting to at least $100,000.

Abrams, according to Harry Berman, general sales manager of Universal, says that he bought 2,900 reels from Mullen in November and December. James M. Sheen of Stanchfield and Levey, attorneys for the plaintiff claims that Abrams said he paid $4,500 on account of the purchase price which Sheen understands to be $10,000. Sheen says that Mullen has since left his position with Columbia.

Harry Weinberger, attorney for Ramms and Charles Abrams denied all the allegations made by Universal and stated that the action would be contested at every point.

Film Service Bureau Formed

Leon Schlesinger and Joseph Miles have formed the Film Service Bureau, offices in the Leavitt Bldg. The new organization will specialize in packing, shipping and exporting films, as well as title work in all languages.

Radin Buys Out Tyrol

Matthias Radin has purchased the stock held in Tyrad Pictures, Inc., by Jacques Tyrol and is now in complete control of the company.

Famous Pictures Sales Co. will handle the product in New York.

Larson and Ealand Here

T. E. Larson, of Tulsa, Okla. who conducts an independent exchange out that way is in New York as is Tom Ealand, manager of the Miles string of theaters in Michigan.

They are here to consult with Equity on "The Forbidden Woman." At the Astor.

Barrell on Trip

Charles W. Barrell, director of motion picture activities for the Western Electric Co. has left for the Northern peninsula of Michigan and the Canadian border of Minnesota to secure scenes in the heart of the white and red cedar pole country. Representatives of the big lumber organization controlling the forests will accompany the motion picture people to several of the camps which have never before been visited by outsiders in winter time. James J. Goebel accompanies Barrell in charge of photography.

Here's An Idea

Hugo Riesenfeld announces "Good Spirits" week at the Rialto beginning Sunday. Every feature on the two hour bill will be reminiscent of the days when the army said "how" and the barkeeper said "have one on the house."

The feature will be Bryant Washburn in "The Six Best Cellars." A Prizma color production showing how all the famous drinks were concocted will add to the woes of those whose palates have memories. And the musical numbers will fizz along in the same airy way, with a "Prince of Pilsen" overture and drinking songs to fill up.

Chamberlain, Service Manager

Fred V. Chamberlain, former special representative with Famous Players and later at the home office has been made general service manager in charge of the greater part of the detail work existing between exchanges and the executive offices.

Rio Opens To-Night

David V. Picker who operates a chain of theaters in the Bronx and upper Manhattan, will open his new, Rio Theater on Broadway at 159th to 160th Sts. to-night with "The Street Called Straight."

The Rio will be under the supervision of Picker with Francis A. Mangan assisting.

Going Up

A very good idea may be gleaned of what stage producers are asking for the screen rights to their plays from the report that William A. Brady is asking $300,000 for "The Man Who Came Back" and $60,000 for "Bought and Paid For." He has been made an offer of $25,000 for the latter, it is said.

A Cipher Left Out

A theatrical publication was responsible for the publication of the report that the Anthony A. Brady Estate of Albany had invested $3,000,000 in Selznick Pictures Corp.

An official of the company stated yesterday that it was too bad the publication had eliminated a cipher; that $30,000,000 might interest them, but not three.

New Theater for Spiegel

Max Spiegel, Sol Brill and William F. Rafferty have purchased a triangular plot of ground facing West 12th St. Seventh and Greenwich Ave. on Sheridan Square in Greenwich Village upon which will be built a 2,500 seat theater. Work will be started May 1 and it is hoped to have the theater completed in about seven months.

The policy has not as yet been determined: Straight pictures or pictures and vaudeville may be shown.

"Fair Women" Sold

"The Dream of Fair Women" has been sold by M. W. Garsson, Foundation Film Corp., to the Criterion Film Exchange of Atlanta, for North Carolina, Florida, South Carolina, Alabama, Kentucky and Tennessee.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

During the time "Pollyanna," was being presented in New York by second run exhibitors, Macy's department store used the Pollyanna idea in advertising some hosiery. The copy read: "Hosiery displays are quite the fashion during puddle weather. As Pollyanna would have it, 'You can even be glad of a blizzard, 'cause the folks can see that you wear silk stockings.' Pollyanna would have lots of 'glad' reasons if she had known our store. For instance there are facts about quality."

You will probably find it profitable arranging similar tie-ups with stores in your vicinity.

anley Introduces New Bill at Odds With Measure Sponsored by Charles Hespe

Somewhat of a clash developed sterday at a meeting of northern rsey exhibitors at the Astor when became known that a new bill d been introduced in the legisla- re, sponsored by the Stanley Co. Philadelphia and the Philadelphia change Managers Asso. The sh developed when Dr. H. Charles spe who had been working on original bill which includes rse racing and the like declared t he felt himself "undermined."

Harry M. White, Goldwyn man- r at Philadelphia, who was pres- at the meeting which was pre- ed over by Harry H. Buxbaum Famous Players, stated that the v bill had been drawn up by the nley attorney and that the or- ization's 122 theaters in the ladelphia territory were solidly back of it.

White, who evidently was em- vered to speak for the southern ion of the state stated that if pe's measure were adhered to felt that the Stanley Co. and southern exhibitors would with- w. White explained that the new did not include horse racing prize fighting only films, con- s and baseball. He stated that senators in Trenton were lined in favor of this measure and the Governor himself opposed pe's bill.

Dayton, O.—W. K. Mathews, publicity man for Charles Cross' Columbia, prior to the opening of Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead," secured the support of the schools, churches and patriotic organizations. He had a special showing of the picture, at which 25 leading citizens were present and then got them to make statements which he used in the Dayton Journal as news matter. In Columbus, the production secured the support of the American Legion and clergy and in Shelbyville, Ind., it was made the center of the Lincoln Day celebration of Victory Post, No. 7 American Legion. One newspaper boosted the production as a patriotic duty.

hat It Will Mean to the Coming Season—As Viewed by J. Parker Read, Jr.

What of production for the com- year, beginning next Septem-, was asked of J. Parker Read,

Mr. Read is here with Thomas H. e with reference to the affairs of Associated Producers and as neral manager of the Ince organ- on and also in connection with own production. He is now pro- ing with Louise Glaum and Ho- t Bosworth as his stars.

Decry Exchange Rate

Canadians Urged to Buy British Films and Avoid Monetary Losses

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Toronto—The Canadian Moving Picture Digest's Montreal correspondent says:—

"Exchange rates have told a sad story among the Montreal exchanges. The price of American productions is now up so high with a 17 per cent. premium that they are almost prohibitive, allowing a narrow margin of profit for either exhibitor or exchange man.

"Now is the time to get busy on British productions which do not cost anything like so much and have the exchange working the other way in favor of Canadians."

Independent producers seem to be of the opinion that Canadians have no way out of the situation and that they will have to continue the purchase of American pictures.

One man stated that Canadians do not like British productions any more than the average individual in this country.

Famous Plans

Outlined for Coming Season by Adolph Zukor Before Sailing for Europe

Famous Players plans for the coming season were made known yesterday by Adolph Zukor in a statement issued prior to his sailing for Europe.

In the statement Mr. Zukor announced that only big features would be made for the coming season by Famous, limiting production to 100 features. He furnished a list of houses which will play long, extended runs, and added that 2,200 houses are playing their productions on a percentage basis. National advertising will be continued, he said, and he predicted that Famous would have 50 exchanges before long, in this country. He furnished a list of Paramount productions to be released and added that Sir James M. Barrie was not only writing a special story for Paramount, but that they owned "Peter Pan" as well as other Barrie features. Present day stage successes owned for pictures were also named.

In part Mr. Zukor said:

I am leaving for Europe in a most contented frame of mind for I believe the Famous Players Lasky Corp. is now ready to meet the demands of what I am confident will be the most prosperous year that motion picture exhibitors ever have enjoyed.

It will be a year of unprecedented profit for theaters that can supply the public's rapidly increasing demand for genuinely fine motion pictures. Success, in turn, will come to the producers who best can furnish these theaters with the quality of product, week after week, that these theaters must have. There is no profit in poor pictures nor in poor theaters.

The production department is capable of turning out 200 feature pictures a year, if made on the ordinary production schedule, but will make only half that number. We shall make nothing but big pictures. Many theaters are being converted into long run houses, dedicated entirely to the showing of our best pictures at higher prices for engagements of weeks and months. Among these are Phil Gleichman's Broadway-Strand in Detroit; Marcus Loew's Euclid in Cleveland; Grauman's Rialto in Los Angeles; Tom Moore's Garden in Washington; Bernard Depkin's Wizard in Baltimore; Jacob Lourie's Park in Boston; Spyros Skouras West End Lyric in St. Louis; Jones, Linick and Schaefer's

Hundreds of theaters are making permanent arrangements to depend upon Paramount Artcraft pictures for the back-bone of their programs. More than 2,200 theaters are playing our productions on a percentage basis, realizing that the percentage is the most equitable plan for film rental. The percentage system guarantees that the exhibitor shall never over-pay for a production as well as that he shall not under-pay.

Our national advertising will be continued. This advertising is insurance to every holder of Paramount Artcraft franchise.

We shall soon add exchanges in Indianapolis and in Albany, making a total of 30 exchanges. It will not be long before this number will be increased to perhaps 50 exchanges. Our supply of material for production is unlimited.

Sir James M. Barrie is writing a story, as yet unnamed for a Paramount Artcraft picture. We also own his "Peter Pan," "The Little Minister," and "What Every Woman Knows." Production work will begin this spring with Marie Corelli's famous story, "The Sorrows of Satan."

to play a certain part. If we could not obtain the service of that individual at that particular time, we took someone else and were happy. Today the casting of productions that are supposed to be worth while means that we want certain specific individuals of certain definite types and we will not waive and take what we can get, but instead wait until we can obtain the service of that particular individual even though the time lapsing is several weeks, meanwhile we try to shoot some other part of the production awaiting the arrival of the particular individual. Sometimes even this cannot be done and the consequent delay follows.

"Then as to stories. We are facing the situation where the obtaining of stories and good material becomes more and more difficult. How much time does it take to select one possible story, from, let us say, one hundred scripts offered. Figure it out and you can easily see how difficult that end of it becomes. I have not included any of the other difficulties which enter into production."

Mr. Read pointed out that it was his belief that the problems of fewer productions was going to weigh automatically upon the exhibitor and that the exhibitor would be compelled to find ways and means by which he could extend the length of his showing. "If," said Mr. Read, "producers carry out the program as planned for the coming year, the chances are that we will have approximately 50 per cent less productions offered than heretofore. Take Mr. Ince as an example. His various producing units have turned out somewhere in the neighborhood of 35 productions and I doubt very much if his total productions for a year for Associated Producers will be more than 10 perhaps 12 at the best."

Mr. Read said it should not be overlooked that intensified exploitation, publicity and real showmanship will come in for their own under the new basis which September will exact.

Two $500,000 Suits

Damage Actions Filed Against Hodkinson, Collins and Others

Mrs. Alice M. Long, widow of Samuel Long, and Frank J. Marion have filed suits in the Supreme Court to recover $500,000 damages each, from W. W. Hodkinson, Frederick L. Collins, Holland S. Duell and Raymond Pawley.

The complaints, which are identical, allege that prior to November, 1916, each was the owner of 2,000 shares of Paramount Pictures stock in voting trust certificates and 333 shares not subject to a voting trust, and 82 shares of the Progressive Motion Picture Co., of which Hodkinson had been president. He was also president of Paramount prior to June, 1916; Pawley was treasurer, Collins was president of the McClure Publications, Inc. and had endeavored to secure control of Paramount and five affiliated corporations, it is said, negotiating through Mr. Duell as his attorney.

The defendants organized and became officers of the Superpictures, Inc., and knowing the value of the plaintiff's stock formed a plan to induce them to exchange their [illegible] for 1,600 shares of second cumulative 7% stock of Superpictures, it is said. The complaint says they falsely stated that Superpictures had obtained $1,000,000 as a working capital from New York bankers and had acquired the Triangle Distributing Corporation which they represented had cost nothing but would yield $700,000 a year in earnings.

They also represented that they had 12, 250 shares of the Famous Players-Lasky stock guaranteed to yield dividends of $300,000. They represented that they would do an annual gross business of $6,500,000 and that they could get $500,000 national advertising through the McClure Publications without a cash outlay.

The complaint alleges that the statements were all false and that if they had been stating facts the stock acquired by the plaintiffs would have been worth $500,000 to each for which they sue.

W. W. Hodkinon was the only one of the four defendants who could be reached on Saturday for a statement. He said that the action probably referred to a matter which developed after his tenure of office with Superpictures, Inc.

ploitation of big pictures, and the booking of big features for longer runs, have ceased to be the exception and have become the practice.

The development of strings of theaters is progressing as never before. Recently J. E. Hostettler who started by gaining control of three houses in his home town of Waterloo, Iowa, and who now has 14 theaters in fairly large towns throughout the two states, had purchased the Lyric, Rialto and Liberty from Joe Gorman in Lincoln. The consideration was said to be not less than $150,000.

A. H. Blank, who controls the largest theaters in the key cities, and who has a string of 16 of the largest houses in Iowa and Nebraska, recently bought theaters in Sioux City, Iowa, and in Columbus, Neb. Blank is planning to build another large house, costing nearly a quarter of a million, in South Omaha, the big packing center of Iowa and Nebraska. There are constant rumors of his plans to build elsewhere, too.

The World Realty Co., which now owns the Sun, Moon and Muse, downtown houses in Omaha, has announced plans to build a picture palace at 15th and Douglas at a total cost of nearly a million.

Larry Longnecker, of Sioux City, owner of the Sun has announced plans to build a 2,000 seat house at a cost of $300,000.

K. Moreland, who for years contented himself with the Majestic in Missouri Valley, Ia., has recently accumulated six houses in some of the prominent Iowa and Nebraska centers, and frankly announces that he is far from reaching the end of his string.

The Adams circuit which has a string in Southwestern Iowa is understood to be in the market for more houses.

No Wall Street or big company capital has entered Iowa or Nebraska openly.

Select Convention

Six Day Conference Planned Starting April 5 at the Astor

The second annual convention and six-day conference of home office and branch executives of Select will begin at the Astor on April 5.

The first meeting will be of an informal nature and will be held Monday morning at the home office. The first business session will be held Monday afternoon in the convention headquarters at the Astor, following an informal lunch at which the convention delegates will be the guests of L. J. Selznick. The balance of the week will be devoted to formal business sessions morning and afternoon.

Several theater parties will probably be held.

One of the innovations will be the daily publication of a convention edition of the Selznick house organ "The Brain Exchange." This will be published in the form of a morning newspaper and will be delivered to the rooms of the delegates at an early hour. Copies will be mailed to the branch offices.

To Publish Film "White List"

The Presbyterian Church plans the publication of a "white list" of films which will be recommended to fans.

The idea is part of a general reorganization just perfected. A division known as the Department of Amusement and Recreation has been formed, attached to the Board of Temperance and Mutual Welfare.

Dr. Charles Scanlon of Pittsburgh, general secretary is quoted as saying:

"We do not intend to cruasde wildly against moving pictures, but we hope to be able to discover sufficient wholesome plays to enable us to make a 'white list' which we can recommend to decent people."

Capellani With Robertson-Cole

Albert Capellani has signed a two year contract with Robertson Cole to make specials. He will probably devote a year.

Goldwyn After Labor Support

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Philadelphia—The local Goldwyn offices are showing "The Cup of Fury" to labor organizations throughout the state in an endeavor to secure their approval of the production.

This is being done in order to refute the charge of the State Board of Censors who banned the film saying it was "adverse to labor."

Easy Money

The Fox offices refuse to comment or have anything to say in reference to a report in circulation that at one of their theaters, the house staff managed to get with $55,000 of "Easy Money."

According to reports, the plan carried through was the old one of the doormen and the ticket sellers working in collusion with the house manager and re-selling again and again, old tickets. It is understood that the scheme netted about $1,800 at an average per week and that the total sum secured in this matter reached approximately $55,000.

Had it not been for a maid of Mrs. Fox it is said that nothing would ever have been known of the scheme. The young man keeping company commented to the maid that it seemed strange that in view of the money Fox was making, that they were using old tickets at the theater in question. This led to the investigation in which is reported five detectives were involved with the result that the entire staff implicated has been laid off.

Farrar Through

Geraldine Farrar admitted yesterday afternoon that she together with her husband, Lou Tellegen had severed relations with Goldwyn "some time ago."

Miss Farrar said her future plans as to films were unsettled.

Goldwyn officials refused to discuss this matter yesterday.

Weiss Leaves First Natl

Chicago—Harry Weiss has resigned as manager of the First National Exchange of Chicago, effective March 20. Weiss has been with First National since it was organized by Nathan Ascher and Aaron Jones.

First National had not heard of Weiss' resignation yesterday and therefore did not know his successor.

Wilson and Callaghan Leave

Ben Wilson and G. H. Callaghan leave for California to-day.

Utica Crowded

But Then Utica's a Small Place—Film Folk Gathering

(By Wire to WID'S DAILY)

Utica, N. Y.—Up this way things generally are quiet, but last night there was a peculiar rumble in all of the "leading" hotels. Because the New York State Exhibitors' League was preparing for its annual meeting which starts today and closes to-morrow.

The exhibitors will elect officers, and discuss many questions of moment including Sunday shows, censorship, percentage booking, producers invading the exhibitors' field and Wall Street's interest in pictures. Meetings will be held in the Hotel Utica. There will be a big banquet and other amusements.

Zena Keefe is here and the Utica Observer will give a prize of $50 to the first Utica woman who recognizes here on the street.

Many of the film companies have representatives here. "Jim" Anderson of First Natl. was lonesome, however yesterday, before the crowd arrived.

Selznick will publish a daily paper here, "The Selznick News," during the convention.

Lund to Produce in Sweden

Oscar A. C. Lund, formerly a director for World and Fox has left for Sweden where he will produce several pictures, returning with the negatives in the autumn.

Farnum Through With United

Dustin Farnum's contract with United Picture Theaters has expired and there has been no renewal.

It is reported that Farnum has been signed by Robertson Cole but the latter refused to confirm or deny the report.

Seeks Dismissal of Ramms Suit

Louis Weinberger, attorney for Ramms, Inc. and Charles Abrams in the suit brought against them by Universal for $100,000 damages served an affidavit and copies of papers on Universal's attorneys yesterday purporting to show that Ramms, Inc. purchased and paid for the films in question.

Weinberger also served a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that no cause of action was stated. He seeks a dismissal of the suit.

The "Virgin's" Smash

One of, if not the biggest press agent's doings in New York was "pulled" yesterday in which Universal's "The Virgin of Stamboul" profitted by column upon column of space.

Not one of the morning papers but fell for the story, and all save two or the afternoon dailies also carried the yarn which referred to the arrival here of an Arabian Shiek who was seeking Sari, a virgin of Stamboul, who had mysteriously disappeared. She was reported to be the heiress of $100,000,000, and the fiance of the Amir—which is a king or something—of Persia.

It was a "peach" of a yarn, and all the papers took it like salt with eggs except the Tribune which indicated that the story had something to do with a film production.

The "Shiek" was "planted" at the Majestic Hotel with a retinue of servants, costumes, etc.

It was reported yesterday that Harry Reichenbach had considerable to do with the "stunt" which caused a lot of envy among producers and publicity men, but he could not be located for a statement.

And maybe Universal executives weren't happy. Oh, no; not at all.

DeMille Still Director-General

In the list of officers of Famous Players re-elected last week the name of Cecil DeMille as director-general was inadvertently omitted. Jessie L. Lasky was re-elected first vice-president.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Omaha—The whole eighth grade of the Springfield, Neb. schools climbed on a train and came all the way to Omaha, nearly 30 miles, to see and to hear the Americanization program at the Rialto on Lincoln's birthday. Manager H. M. Thomas "put over" a great Americanization program and made it highly profitable.

The pictures shown were "The Land of Opportunity," with Ralph Ince and "Evangeline," as produced by Fox.

"Let's have another Americanization day," says Mr. Thomas. "Aside from the patriotic impulse which I, as every normal American, have, I found the occasion one of the most successful ever launched at my theater."

Besides his show for that day—and the same show was continued for three days instead of only one—Thomas put on an advertising campaign with a decidedly Americanizing tendency. The advertisements were really editorials for Americanization, virile, 100 per cent. patriotic, ending with the statement that the Rialto would endeavor to do its share by showing two pictures which were made with the intention of making better Americans.

The front of the house was draped in flags for the three days. A large painting of Lincoln was displayed in front of the theater. The interior was profusely decorated with flags and bunting. The school authorities of Omaha aided in delivering heralds to every school throughout the city to be distributed among the children to be taken home. Press sheets on "Evangeline" were sent to every school principal, to show the desirable nature of the picture for school children.

The attendance of the Springfield eighth grade class was only one of many such classes to attend.

"Thoughtless Women" by Daniel Carson Goodman, and starring Alma Rubens will be released shortly by Cosmopolitan Prod.

Sun Light's Discovery

The Sun Light Arc Co. has in its possession a remarkable three hundred foot length of film showing New York's Broadway at night and it reveals a process and results that are certainly bound to revolutionize those little strips of film often interposed in a feature showing the street at night.

By means of its arcs the company has been able to take a perfectly natural night picture. In most, if not all, Broadway night stuff seen heretofore the vehicles were moving at an impossible speed owing to the long exposures necessary for each frame of film. By means of the arcs the pictures can be taken at normal speed and therefore the movements of persons and vehicles are normal. At the same time the arcs throw out sufficient light to enable details of the scene to stand out whereas in the other night stuff practically everything is a solid black except the electric lights.

These pictures, incidentally, were taken at the time that Harry Reichenbach was engaged, in co-operation with Sunlight Arc, in making the sky about Broadway green for the exploitation of "The Forbidden Woman" at the Capitol Theater.

Laboratories Stock

Distribution Brings Suit from Andrew G. Steen

Andrew G. Steen has brought suit in the Supreme Court for 25,000 shares of stock of the Consolidated Film Laboratories and has obtained temporary injunction restraining William J. Freeman from selling any of the stock unless the shares claimed by the plaintiff are reserved for him pending the suit.

Steen alleges in the complaint in which the Consolidated Film Laboratories, Freeman, Chester D. Coram, Hector J. Streyckmans and Simon E. Duffin are named as defendants that Streyckmans was general manager of the Palisade Laboratories, and Coram was in charge of the Bay State Film Co. raw film producer.

The plaintiff says he conceived the idea of bringing these two concerns together on a basis of co-operation and it was agreed on Jan. 15 last between the plaintiff, Coram, Streyckmans and Freeman that a corporation would be formed with 200,000 shares of stock, of which 100,000 would be sold to the public to pay for the laboratories and for working capital and of the other 100,000 shares the plaintiff would get 25,000 for bringing about the organization of the Consolidated Film Laboratories, which was formed. The stock is now being sold but the plaintiff says that the defendants have refused to issue his stock to him.

The defendants could not be reached yesterday for a statement.

At Broadway Theaters

This Is How First Run Houses Are Presenting Their Programs This Week

The following illustrates how the leading Broadway theaters presented their programs this week. This feature will appear regularly in the Wednesday issue of WID'S DAILY.

RIALTO

Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld is making New Yorkers sit up and take notice this week because of the extremely clever and well shaped bill he is presenting at the Rialto.

The feature "The Six Best Cellars," a story dealing humorously with liquors and prohibition is surrounded with short subject[illegible]d vocal numbers all dealing with friend Barleycorn and his present [illegible]ing sickness. The bill opens with an overture of selections fro[illegible] famous comic opera, "The Prince of Pilsen." It is light and catchy and brought rounds of applause.

The Rialto magazine contains some specially made drawings with humorous titles to match concerning drinks and prohibition and following the scene of Governor Edwards of New Jersey is shown signing his now famous state bill. The closeups of the advocate of mild temperance brought forth tremendous applause. The weekly also contains a Mutt and Jeff number dealing with the liquor question.

Following Emanuel List, bass profundo, sang "Down Deep Within the Cellar," a stirring drinking song, throughout which he was posed against an effective backdrop.

Intern'l Combine

Reported in Making in Which Adolph Zukor Plays Big Part

Advices from both England and Canada bearing upon the departure of Adolph Zukor for London, throw an interesting light on a possible "international" combination in which Mr. Zukor's name occupies an important part.

According to London reports just received it is anticipated that upon Mr. Zukor's arrival events of importance will take place regarding the Lord Beaverbrook—Sir William Jury combination. In view of the fact that Lord Beaverbrook—one of the richest men in England—has been prominently identified with the Canadian Famous Players organization, it is expected that the conference between Lord Beaverbrook, Sir William Jury and Adolph Zukor will be of the utmost importance.

English advices are to the effect that Sir William Jury and Lord Beaverbrook jointly have secured a great number of the more important large houses corresponding to first run theaters in this country.

It is reported that they have practically secured control of the P. C. T.

Studio in Florida

Character Pictures have purchased a complete studio, laboratory and large grounds at Tampa, Fla. Besides the studio and laboratory, Character has purchased 36 acres of land on Oriental Island, just outside of Tampa.

A still larger studio and a large outdoor stage measuring 125 by 225 ft. is to be erected there. This means that Character will settle permanently in Florida and begin extensive production immediately.

The first production to be made will be "The Isle of Destiny," by Mack Arthur.

Luncheon

L. J. Selznick and William Fox were practically obscured from the crowd in the Hunting Room at the Astor yesterday during luncheon time. One of the huge pillars prevented the crowd from seeing them.

Later Mr. Selznick declared that their meeting was of no particular consequence.

But those who saw them together sure did a lot of talking.

Wants "Show-Down"

ers the need for an instant show-down with the producer-distributor concerns that are buying, leasing and building theaters with the certain intention of trying to oust the present-day independents, and of establishing a theater monopoly whereby they can control production sources.

"I have always been an independent, and I always will be. Here in the Southeast there is evidence galore that every word Mr. Williams wrote as a warning of the plans and intentions of the would-be-exhibitors among the producer-distributor factions is absolute fact Make no mistake, whether you are a quick thinker and an observer, or just 'content with things as they are,' you have got to get aboard one of two ships immediately. Either you are an independent exhibitor who will fight for independence, and do the things you can do, without loss of money, time or energy, to compel the producers-distributors to stay out of exhibition and stop their plans for a national chain to compete with independently owned and operated theaters, or you are going to find yourself one of the "sardines" aboard the other boat, a victim because you slept Wake up to the actual situation. Withdraw your business from the combinations that are going to compete with you mighty soon. You don't need to worry about productions. There are plenty of excellent pictures on the market that have been made by independent stars and producers for independent exhibitors. No? I'll prove it.

"I haven't shown a program picture in the Criterion Theater for two years. I have depended entirely upon the independently made pictures to provide the quality and variety and degree of star and story value necessary to the profitable conduct of Atlanta's best known first run house And the Criterion, so I am told, is far from being a failure. In fact and I know this myself, it has a remarkable clientele of regular patrons. Of equal importance to you as an independent exhibitor who must help to drive the producer-distributors out of the theater field by supporting independent producers until the other fellows are willing to go back home where they belong and be good, the Criterion Theater, using only independent releases, is charging the highest admissions of any motion picture house in Atlanta.

"Why should I pay out money in rentals every week, only to wake up some morning and find a new theater across the street, built with some of the dollars that I spent in buying film service from the producer-distributors who bought or erected it? Not me I want to stay in the business as an exhibitor.

"That is just one illustration. Mr Williams said there were many of them. He is right The South has been stampeded in the last six months with rumors, reports and threats about what certain producer-distributors would do to acquire competing theaters if their present accounts did not 'come across' as demanded. And the funny part of it is that a number of exhibitors foolishly lost their heads saw disaster before them, and took their medicine The same tactics are being tried, or will be, in other territories, according to what I have learned of the plans that sponsor them

"Were I a program exhibitor I wouldn't hesitate a moment to join in the demand for a show-down I don't deny that program releases of any brand are not good worthy booking propositions. But I do believe with Mr. Williams, that they are not entitled to exhibitor patronage until the people who create them stop their attempts to dominate the theater situation with the exhibitor's own money, or with any other money, recruited from any source.

"Let's have a show-down. If producer-distributors want theaters, let them go and them but not with your money. You know, as well as I do, that they cannot succeed in further encroachment into our domain without the financial strength they are receiving from film rentals to you fellows who are using their service from them until they call quits. Then when they promise to behave, get behind them again and let quality as between program releases and independently made productions decide to whom you will go

At Broadway Houses

Number 4 on the bill was the Prizma subject "Ghost of John Barleycorn," showing various old mixed drinks in colors. This went over big and the audience was sent into spasms of laughter when a member of the orchestra let forth a loud groan when a man in the picture drank one of the drinks.

Preceeding the feature Helen Thomas, a soprano, sang "Absinthe Frappe" from Victor Herbert's "It Happened in Nordland," while light effects in the side prosceniums showed bubbling glasses. The feature followed and subsequently the orchestra played Von Tilzer's "Alcoholic Blues," a popular jazz tune.

The Christie comedy "Her Bridal Nightmare" is the only spot on the bill that fails to deal with the liquor question.

The Rialto is piling them them in this week and the rush at the box office is due in no small measure to the peculiarly attractive character of this bill which Reisenfeld is calling "Good Spirits" week. And an important thing to remember is that none of the features on the program come out flat-footed for or against prohibition, excepting the Governor Edwards scene. Such a diplomatically balanced program should go over with equal effect in locations where the sentiment is either wet or dry.

CAPITOL

The Capitol Theater this week is presenting a condensed version of "Pagliacci" in addition to the feature, "Black Is White," which is the first Famous Players production to go into that theater.

The version of "Pagliacci" was very much appreciated by a large audience. The Capitol business seems to be picking up on this new type of program which joins tabloid opera with the picture. Other features on the bill included Topics of the Day, a Robertson-Cole scenic, "The Last Resort," Capitol News and a Prizma subject.

The orchestra played an overture from "Orpheus in the Underworld." The bill concluded with a Fox Sunshine comedy, "Money Talks," which got over very well.

STRAND

The program at the Strand this week is headed by a slight diversion from the musical end in that the opening overture composed of selections from "The Firefly." The well known melodies were a happy relief from the usual operatic scores. The Topical Review was followed by an O. Henry story filmed by Vitagraph entitled, "A Philistine in Bohemia." This took the place of the usual two-reel comedy offering.

The vocal selections consisted of "Bedouin Love Song" sung by Malcolm McEachern and "Mother O'Mine" sung by Estelle Carey.

Constance Talmadge in "In Search of a Sinner" occupied the most prominence on the program and music rendered in connection with the showing was well selected from current popular songs with the famous Victor Herbert "Kiss Me Again" among those used.

Bray cartoon of "Ignatz" and a Chester scenic, "Some Speed to Surago" completed the bill.

BROADWAY

The bill at the Broadway retains its Powder Puff Follies and the Christie comedy "License Applied For" this week, while the new Vitagraph feature is "Deadline at Eleven," a melodrama of newspaper life. It registered nicely with

VOL. XXI MARCH 13, 1920 No. XII

The Theme and Its Treatment

IT is a pleasure—as well as a policy—to record, on this page, the occasional picture which seems to us to mark a distinct and broad advance in production.

Such a picture is " Dangerous Days," the first Mary Roberts Rinehart contribution to the Eminent Authors Series.

" Dangerous Days," the novel, is said to have been Mrs. Rinehart's best selling book; so the picture goes forth with this considerable advance advertising.

But this, to our mind, is not so important, not nearly so important, as the fact that the story was written with the picture clearly in mind, or else by a mind which naturally expresses itself in picture values.

So we have here, to begin with, a theme successfully created for the screen.

That is a big point. Such stories, no matter who write them, will mark the good picture of the future.

And the theme is a thoughtful one—not merely a story created to get picture effects. The author looked into and under our social, spiritual and economic life at the moment of this country's entrance into the war, and tells what she saw. The story makes you think; it aims at something.

The second big point is harmony in production. This, clearly, is a high type of an organization made picture—one in which several trained minds have successfully worked to a common end.

To express these results separately, we have:

* * *

FIRST, perfect continuity. We understand this to be a collaboration of Mrs. Rinehart and Charles Kenyon, supervised by J. G. Hawks. The task was not a simple one. We have the separate romances of the steel maker with a wife and the other woman he loves; the son, with his youthful problems of love and duty; the German born foreman of the works, and his daughter who loves the steel maker's son. There were grave dangers here of jerkiness and confusion; yet the story moves clearly, swiftly and logically along.

The subtitles. They are exceptionally brief, apt and strong: " wallops," every one. We are told that Mrs. Rinehart wrote them. Why not?

The acting by an all-star cast is so sincere, the settings throughout are so realistic that you forget you are viewing a picture.

Realism is the keynote clear through. There is lavishness only where it is truly expressive of the millionaire's home and entertainments. Dominant, always in the picture, is its locale, the smoky, thunderous steel city.

All of which mean that Reginald Barker has done an exceptional piece of direction. And direction here, as always in pictures, is of the utmost importance. Yet, we are sure, Mr. Barker will be the first to say that he could not have got these results without such a theme, and such preparation of a theme, for the screen.

WE are glad to cite this picture as a well-rounded example of the new kind of picture, the kind the screen calls for now, the genuine example of fewer and better pictures.

W have seen pictures as well and carefully made, but they may have lacked a theme suitable for picture presentation. And we have seen good themes carelessly produced, though there is much less excuse these days for poor production than for unsuitable themes.

It is the harmonious whole that counts: and such pictures will come only from a harmonious organization highly trained in picture creation and expression. This may be a very large organization; or it may consist of a very few people.

The theme is of the utmost importance. Without a theme stars and directors are of little avail.

The theme must be a picture theme—a story capable of expression, not in word values, but in picture values. This is the paramount point. Without this quality authors' names and books' names are inconsequential.

Then comes the adaptation to the screen. We are glad to note that an author like Mrs. Rinehart thinks well enough of pictures not merely to create for them, but to adapt her creation and write her own subtitles.

And we predict that many more authors will soon be similarly engaged.

National Film now has a studio council, which passes on all important matters connected with production.

Victor Nulty has been made assistant general manager at the National Studios.

Lyons and Moran will soon enter production on their next feature comedy drama entitled "Bohemian Nights," a magazine story by John Clay, continuity by Philip Hurn.

Harry Edwards has agreed to continue directing the Flanagan and Edwards comedies for National Film.

Tom Mills is directing the third National Picture production. "The Invisible Divorce" at the Selznick West Coast studios.

Monte Banks who is being starred in Welcome Comedies, made for Warner Brothers under the general supervision of Frank C. Griffin, has completed his first two-reeler, "A Rare Bird."

Hal and Dick Rosson assistant and cameraman for Director Arthur Rosson have returned from an extensive automobile tour through the desert and the mountain country where they have been shooting unique scenic effects that will be used in some of Director Rosson's future pictures.

The eternal question, "How old is Ann?" or, as it is in this case, "How old is Mary?" is about to bob up again. It's going to be put before a jury in the Federal Court. The principal is Miss Mary Miles Minter, film actress. She will aver in court that the American Film Co. owes her $4,125 in back pay and expenses. The contract was made by the mother of the actress and it gives Miss Mary's age as 17 years. H. W. Bodkin, attorney for the company says Miss Minter is more than 26 years old.

Declaring he was discharged by the National Film Co. before his contract had expired, Paul C. Hurst, an actor has filed suit in the Superior Court against the company for $20,100 damages. Hurst alleged he was employed for a period of two years to act in motion pictures at a salary of $250 a week the first year and $300 a week the second year. This was last June, but on Feb. 19 he alleged, he was discharged.

Under the direction of Fred J. Butler, work on the first picture starring David Butler by the D. N. Schwab Prod., Inc., has started. "Sitting on the World" will be the initial offering.

Meet in Chicago

This Year's Convention of M. P. E. A. Not Slated for Virginia

(Special to WID'S DAILY)

Indianapolis—Frank Rembusch, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc. states that the 1920 convention of the league will be held in Chicago and not in Ocean View, Va., as originally planned.

Jake Wells wrote Rembusch saying that he doesn't think Ocean View would be able to accommodate the crowd expected.

Rembusch is circulating a form letter among New York exhibitors in which he states that an "up state" committee of the New York exhibitors refused to permit the members of the M. P. E. A. to "fit into their convention."

He says that William H. Linton invited the Rembusch organization to attend the convention at Utica and that the invitation was accepted.

RIVOLI

For an innovation the program at the Rivoli this week contained a chorus of mixed voices. Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

As a result of some clever stunts being engineered by Joseph M. Schenck, Norma and Constance Talmadge will receive much publicity. To begin with, the painting of Norma by Vargas, the Japanese artist on the cover of the February Theater Magazine, has been reproduced on one and three sheets. Haskell Coffin's portrait of Constance Talmadge, to appear on the cover of the April number of the Pictorial Review will also be so reproduced. In addition, two songs, "A Daughter of Two Worlds" and "Fairy Castles in the Sky" bear pictures of Norma Talmadge on the covers, the former being by Paul Sarazan of First National. It will be used as part of the music cue sheet with the picture of that name. A deal with a silver frame manufacturer has been closed, whereby a million pictures of Constance Talmadge and half that many of Norma, autographed, will be used in these frames as an advertising display in large department stores. Toilet articles, bearing Norma Talmadge's name, recently placed on the market are also proving of value.

Columbus, O. — Following the booking of "Huckleberry Finn" by the Southern, Manager Maddox started a campaign that resulted in a successful run. His ads carried a big head of Huck Finn, and "Lookee!" was the slogan. He then proceeded to offer prizes for the best letters from school children explaining what they would do if they discovered the treasure Huck Finn finds in the picture. Thirty 24 sheet stands in the best locations in town one of them being on fire ruins of a leading department store served their purpose and Huckleberry Finn Apple Pie on restaurant menus, with the words "See the picture at the Southern" following, also helped. In addition he secured the co-operation of schools, Huck Finn War Savings Stamp clubs being formed in various classes. To get in, boys had to sell $100 worth of stamps within a certain period, $3 $2 and $1 being offered to each of those turning in the best record, and tickets being given to all members A baby checking nursery opened during the run of the film was another novelty.

Johnson City, Tenn.—Ben Pflaum, manager of the Majestic, after booking Charles Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," hit upon a very novel scheme of exploiting it. He had an advertisement inserted in papers, to the effect that 50 to 100 dogs were wanted, asking boys to bring their dogs to the house on Saturday morning at 10:30 A. M., promising to pay for the canines. He had paste-board saddles made, of a size to fit the animals, with the words "Majestic Theater, Monday, Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life." The youngsters were suspicious, however, and he had to explain that he was willing to offer ten cents for each hound and had no sinister designs. It so happened however, that the dogs could not agree and a big fight resulted in the lobby, it being necessary to turn the hose on them, after the saddles had been completely destroyed. But everyone learned of the battle and Pflaum received the publicity he wanted after all.

hicago, Ill.—Andrew Karzas, nager of the Woodlawn, following the booking of "Everywoman," d a few simple exploitation emes that brought a considerable unt of patronage. He started by nging an attractive lobby display, also placing framed photographs of Wanda Hawley, Violet ning, Bebe Daniels and others in cast in show windows of merchants within ten blocks of the se. An eight page leaflet was published, in two colors, including rotogravures of various scenes n the film.

anton, O.—"Are Secret Marages Justifiable" is a question h affords considerable opportunity for amateur wielders of the to get off excess verbiage, and when N. E. Bernower of the Alhambra held an essay contest of this question, offering three prizes of $15, $10, and $5 respectively, many competed. The question was asked in conjunction with such a problem resulting in "The Mystery of the Yellow Room." In addition to the contest which called for manuscripts of not more than 100 words, a teaser campaign helped. There were also 1,000 placards, with yellow arrows and black type, pointing trails in every direction to the house. Although there was a gale when it opened, the production played to big business from the very start.

Putting It Over

Here is how a brother exhibitor put his show over. Send along your ideas. Let the other fellow know how you cleaned up.

Offers of handbags, umbrellas, etc., are being made to girls who resemble Edna Purviance most, in houses in northern New Jersey and New York, in conjunction with the presentation of the Charlie Chaplin in "A Burlesque on Carmen," being released by Victor Kremer. The winners will have their names announced from the stage and their photos will be published in newspapers.

Chicago, Ill.—Just what connection there is between hams and aeroplanes is not perfectly evident, but the former served to help put over "The Great Air Robbery," starring Lieutenant Locklear at the Bandbox.

A triple tie-up, between the Evening American, and Morris and Company and the theater resulted in the big business. The paper carried pictures of an aeroplane which dropped 10,000 leaflets from it. Two hundred tickets good for hams if delivered to Morris and Co., were also thrown down, as were 20 passes to the house. It was a worth while stunt as was shown by the receipts.

Atlanta, Ga.—H. Wayne Pierson, exploitation representative for Famous Players assisted by the Rialto management, was responsible for a big exploitation stunt that created quite a stir and made the success of "On with the Dance" a sure thing.

A masked dancer appeared in the windows of Daniels Brothers' department store, in conjunction with a contest held by the Georgian and Sunday American, prizes being awarded for the best reply in less than 300 words to the following set of questions:

"How much should a man with a $5,000 annual income allow his wife for her clothes?

"How should his wife arrange this budget for clothes?

"How much should she spend on each of these items—suits, coats, hats, gloves and the rest?"

The contest ran for a week and women readers of the two publications only were eligible. Meanwhile, it was promised that the identity of the dancer would be revealed when the engagement of the picture began. There was much publicity given the contest, and passes good for free admission were given away—an inexpensive outlay on which much was realized.

TO OUR CRITICS!

We wish to thank you heartily and sincerely, not for your praise, nor your approval, nor the enthusiasm with which you have received "A MAN THERE WAS" by Henrik Ibsen.

All this, we assume, was done in justice to yourselves and in fairness to your readers.

We thank you for that which would appear unfavorable to us in your criticism.

After having declared "A MAN THERE WAS" one of the greatest photoplays shown in this country, you have unhesitatingly and in one or two instances, even harshly, announced that the wonderful effect of the drama, its absorbing charm and power, as well as its consummate art of action and direction, are hampered by the superabundance of poetry in the sub-titles.

This criticism of yours we found to be absolutely true and just, and we thank you for it.

For it gave us the opportunity to eliminate from the greatest play ever shown in this country a defect, which you properly singled out as the only one of "A MAN THERE WAS."
